SIRS,

IF you ſhould think the following ſketch of Richard Fairbrother's life, worthy of admiſſion into your Magazine, you have full authority to inſert it; and in caſe you approve of it, I will let you have the remainder of the verſes concerning Evan Rees.

Your humble ſervant,

Sept. 23, 1798. Z. E. Z.

N. B. I decline annexing the Engliſh to the Latin verſes at the end, as the tranſlator had not made them quite applicable to the preſent circumſtance.

RICHARD FAIRBROTHER

Was born of humble, yet well-diſpoſed parents in Eſſex, in the year 1734. At an early period, he ſhewed a very great attachment to dogs and horſes, and, as he advanced in life, his inclinations were bent towards hunting, which, as it received no material check from his parents, grew upon him to ſuch a degree, that he reſolved to leave every other mode of obtaining a livelihood, and give himſelf up totally to dogs and horſes; and accordingly, about the age of eighteen, entered into ſervice in the capacity of groom, where he gained ſome knowledge of horſes; but he had not yet attained the object of his deſires, he was much fonder of dogs than horſes, and his greateſt delight was in the ſtudy of the different ſpecies of the canine race, the beſt manner of breeding them, the various diſtempers they were ſubject to, and the beſt and moſt effectual means of reſtoring them to health; ſuch, in youth, were his favourite purſuits.

The Author of this Biographical Sketch, requeſts the reader to excuſe his not enumerating the ſeveral perſons names, with whom Richard Fairbrother lived, before he arrived at an age ſufficiently mature, to take upon him the management of a pack of hounds, which were not numerous. His good behaviour was ſuch, that it was no eaſy matter to be diſpleaſed with him; and if at any time he did offend, he always endeavoured, to the utmoſt of his power, to make up for it by his future attention and obedience.

His relations being in indigent circumſtances, it was not poſſible, or even to be expected, that he ſhould receive any extraordinary education; but notwithſtanding ſuch diſadvantages, there was a ſomething in his behaviour far above the lower order of people, and which was much improved after he became a huntſman, on account of his frequently converſing with gentlemen who took that diverſion.

After having gone through, with a cheerful mind, the different ſtages, which were only preparatory to his greateſt ambition, and having with much application gained a ſufficient knowledge of dogs and horſes, to qualify him for the

the employ he so much wished, he at length entered into the service of a gentleman, in the quality of huntsman, where his talents in that line soon became conspicuous, and confirmed him in his choice of the situation, which his inclination led him to prefer. I must here again beg leave to pass over the names of those with whom he first lived in that capacity, that I may make mention of that more celebrated part of his life, which he spent in the service. ——— Russel, Esq. in Essex, the fame of whose fox hounds, I doubt not but every sportsman must recollect, and which the subject of this article hunted in such a manner, as rendered his name famous throughout that part of the country, and gained him the esteem of his master, which he enjoyed many years.—Leaving that place, he then went into the service of Harding Newman, Esq. of Navestock, in Essex, whose fox hounds were likewise looked upon as equal to any in the kingdom. In this gentleman's service, he rode a horse, at that time well known to sportsmen by the name of Jolly Roger, which carried him through some of the severest chases ever known in this kingdom *; and by his extraordinary feats in the chase, united to superior talents, he gained the admiration of every one. Here I should not omit to mention a very long chase which happened during the time he was in Mr. Newman's service. On the 2d of December, 1793, they found a fox at Bromfield Hall Wood, near Chelmsford, and after a chase of more than twenty-six miles, without the least check, ran into him, as he was attempting to get into Lord Maynard's Garden, at Dunmow; and it is worth remarking, that the hounds pursued the fox through several herds of deer, and an amazing quantity of hares, with a steadiness not to be surpassed by any of the crack packs which hunt that country. I am sorry I cannot give other instances similar to this, (which are sufficiently numerous) for want of an accurate description of places. Richard lived in this place several years; at length finding himself advancing in age, and in a manner surrounded by a large family, which looked up to him for its chief support, he began to entertain thoughts of quitting the fox hounds entirely, and entering into some other station of life, which did not require so much exertion, and which would be attended with less danger; not through a fear of death, but in consideration of the injury his family might sustain by his loss.

He might have had employment as a gamekeeper, but an opportunity offering, he preferred hunting a pack of harriers, to that of shooting; and accordingly engaged himself with a gentleman, about three miles from Romford, in Essex, where he spent the remainder of his life, in a manner much to his own comfort and satisfaction. In this place he enjoyed himself, not quite four years, during which period he lived in a Cottage, at a little distance from his master's house, with his wife and children, leading in his old age a peaceable life, like one retired from, and wearied with, the various scenes and vicissitudes of human affairs.

He constantly, during the season, hunted the hounds of the gentleman alluded to, three times a week, and was never known during that period, to conduct himself with the least impropriety; on the contrary, it was observed by most people, that he behaved much better than the generality of those in his station did. I will not pretend to say ſay, that he was entirely free from faults, but they were ſo very trifling, that his other good qualities totally counterbalanced them. His tender regard for his family, and the care he took of it, are very much to be commended, (which though large) he contrived at all times to keep decent, and from want; and much to his credit, he never ſuffered his children to uſe ſuch converſation, or mix with ſuch companions, as might tend to corrupt their morals. As ſoon as they were able to obtain any thing towards their own maintenance, he found means to get them employed.

* See the Sporting Magazine for February, 1794, page 260, vol. iii.

The care alſo he took of both dogs and horſes, is very much to his credit, and merit the warmeſt commendation.

He was a tall man, but by no means luſty. He complained of being unwell during the ſummer, and after a few days very ſevere illneſs, he expired on Saturday morning, the 8th of September inſtant, in the 64th year of his age; and was buried on the Thurſday following at Chigwell, very much regretted, not only by the gentlemen of the chace, but by every one who knew him. ~~I believe I may fairly ſay with Lord Thomas Manſel, in reſpect to Evan Rees, the celebrated Welch huntſman,~~

PRESENTATION OF COLOURS TO THE HATFIELD VOLUNTEERS.

ON Wedneſday the 5th inſtant, the Marchioneſs of Saliſbury preſented the Hatfield Volunteers with a very handſome ſtand of colours. The company was drawn up in the front of Hatfield Houſe, when a very excellent diſcourſe was delivered, and the colours conſecrated by the Rev. Mr. Keet, Rector of Hatfield; which being done, the Marchioneſs preſented the ſtandard to Captain Penroſe, with the following ſpeech:

"GENTLEMEN,

"The proficiency you have, in ſo ſhort a time, made in the uſe of arms, has obtained the applauſe of all thoſe who have had opportunities of obſerving it; and affords an honourable proof of your attention, your zeal, and your patriotiſm. To your courage and loyalty, and to the attachment which in your reſpective ſituations you before felt to our Government and Conſtitution, you now add the union, the diſcipline, and the expertneſs of ſoldiers.

"That no part of a military eſtabliſhment may be wanting to you, permit me to deſire your acceptance of theſe colours, as a mark of the ſenſe I entertain of your merit, and of the gratitude I feel, in common with my neighbours, for the ſecurity we derive from your vigilance and fidelity.

"I preſent them to you in the fulleſt confidence that they will be valiantly defended; for in defending them, you will be animated by the reflection, that you are, at the ſame time, defending your religion, your King and country, your property, your wives and your children, and all that is dear and valuable to men and Engliſhmen."

Captain Penroſe ſpoke in reply as follows:

"I feel particularly happy that it has fallen to my lot to receive from your Ladyſhip's hand the ſplendid mark of honour juſt preſented to the Hatfield Volunteers; and I am deſired by the company to requeſt that you will have the goodneſs to accept their very grateful ful thanks. Permit me, Madam, to add, that we feel that honour greatly enhanced, in being conferred by a lady, not more conspicuous for her high rank and birth, than for her superior mental accomplishments.

"After the very flattering compliments and impressive speech with which the noble Marchioness has honoured us, and the very eloquent and persuasive discourse just delivered by our worthy Rector, it would be presumption in me to add one word of advice to the Hatfield Volunteers. I shall therefore only observe, that from the first hour of their noble and patriotic offers of service, their conduct has been uniformly meritorious and orderly. And I feel confident, that their future behaviour will clearly evince to the world, that they are not unworthy the high honours committed to their care; and that they will, at all times, protect and defend them with the most undaunted courage and bravery.

"I therefore hope and trust, that this standard will be preserved pure and unsullied to the most distant period, and that it will always be considered as the rallying point of the Hatfield Volunteers, in defence of their religion, their King, and their glorious Constitution."

The colours being delivered to the Ensign, the Volunteers fired three vollies, and went through their different evolutions in such a steady and soldier-like manner, as did infinite credit to themselves, and was highly gratifying to a vast concourse of spectators assembled on the occasion.

A public breakfast was given by Lady Salisbury to all the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood, and an elegant dinner was provided for the Volunteers. The affability and attention of the noble Marchioness, added to the well-known hospitality of Hatfield House, could not fail to render the day completely happy and convivial.

On Friday the 7th instant, the Volunteers were entertained by Captain Penrose, at his own house, where a most excellent dinner was provided for the whole company, and never was a day spent in more perfect harmony and conviviality.

PRESENTATION OF A STANDARD TO THE LOYAL ESSEX TROOP OF YEOMANRY.

On Wednesday the 5th instant, the Loyal Essex Troop of Yeomanry, commanded by Col. Burgoyne, received their standard from the hands of Mrs. Montagu Burgoyne. Four troops of yeomanry cavalry and two of infantry, attended on this occasion, and formed a most respectable line on Thornwood Common, in the vicinity of Bush Fair Common. Capt. Conyers's, or the first troop, was on the right, and Capt. Raynsford's on the left. The Hatfield (Regis) Volunteers were commanded by Capt. Allen; the Ongar Volunteers by Capt. Dyer. The other two troops were Capt. Houblon's and Capt. Hankin's. They all made a very military appearance, and did great credit to their respective commanders. About one o'clock Mrs. Montagu Burgoyne, delivered from a platform erected on the occasion, a beautiful standard, embroidered by herself and eldest daughter.

The ceremony commenced by the consecration, which was performed in a very solemn and energetic manner by the Rev. Mr. Miller, of Harlow.

After this part of the ceremony, the standard was then delivered by Mrs. Montagu Burgoyne to the Colonel, with these words:—

"SIR,

"SIR,

"I have great pleasure in presenting this standard to the Troop of Yeomanry which you have the honour to command, certain that the Essex Yeomanry will always distinguish themselves by their loyalty to their King and country, and by their valour in defending them."

The Colonel then addressed the donor of the standard as follows:

"MADAM,

"I do not feel a little proud that the Loyal Essex Yeomanry should receive their standard from a person so nearly allied to me as yourself. When we took up arms in our country's cause, we considered the many blessings we enjoy under that constitution which we have sworn to maintain. But permit me to assure you, that the protection of your sex, and the preservation of our comforts, were among the first objects of our concern. Yes, Madam, the Loyal Essex Yeomanry love their wives and families, and will defend them."

Then turning to his troop and the rest of the Volunteers, he addressed them in the following words:

"This standard is committed to our care, and by receiving it we confirm the sacred obligation we have entered into, to maintain that constitution under which we have lived free and happy, and for which our ancestors fought and bled: to support the laws which distribute equal justice to the poor and to the rich; to defend our gracious Sovereign in the execution of those laws, which are the safeguards not only of our property, but of our liberty and our religion.

"If ever we should be summoned on active service against the attacks of foreign foes, or (what Heaven avert) against the internal enemies of our peace and happiness, this standard, I trust, will animate every man amongst us to use his utmost exertions, and be the signal that leads to victory in a good cause. But should our country not call upon us to fight in her defence, still we must consider this standard as the pledge of our future conduct; and if it be not necessary for us to conquer by our arms, let us reform by our good example. Each of us should consider this standard as his coat of arms, which his conduct may ennoble, but which his misbehaviour must disgrace.

"I beg now to offer you my acknowledgments for the support you have given me in raising this troop, and for your orderly behaviour, and constant attention to those duties which you have voluntarily imposed on yourselves. By persevering in the same line of conduct, you will make me supremely happy, yourselves useful to your country, and your country proud of you.

"To you, my brethren in arms, though not enrolled in the same troop, yet embarked in the same glorious cause, and acting on the same principles of defending our king and country, permit me to say a few words. Such a sight as we now behold must gladden the heart of every Briton. Men of your respectability coming forward without fee or reward in defence of every thing that is dear to us, have proved the salvation of your country. Vain threats, insidious proclamations, and base treachery, are all that we have received from an insolent and implacable foe. The army, which they have arrogantly termed the 'Army of England,' has not dared even to attempt to set a foot on English ground, and the feeble effort which they have made on a sister kingdom, will only bring a curse on them from the deluded victims of

French

French perfidy and treachery. But my feelings on this occasion are excited in a peculiar degree. I see names written in characters of gold on that standard, which are more strongly inscribed on my heart. Four years have passed since you conferred on me and the regiment under my command, this mark of your approbation, in a manner so honourable to yourselves, and so flattering to me. I witnessed the zeal and anxiety which you expressed to come forward in defence of your country; and you only waited to be called on to prove the sincerity of your professions. That happy period arrived, when a neighbouring gentleman, much to his credit, and in a manner that entitles him to the thanks of his country, raised 'The First Troop of Essex Yeomanry.' The bright example was soon followed, and we can now boast of armed yeomanry equal, if not superior, to any other county. I am not unmindful of favours since conferred on me; but though I feel them, I shall not, for reasons too obvious, now speak of them:—unanimity must be our first principle. Free to ourselves, and firmly united, we are invulnerable: but divided and disunited, we fall a prey to our common enemy. Away with all party spirit, all illiberal jealousies, all petty feuds and animosities! Let our only party be our country, our only contention who should best deserve its applause.

"I will no longer trespass on your time than to offer you my most sincere and cordial thanks; and though not privileged by the sacred profession of my respectable friend, I cannot help uttering my good wishes for the Yeomanry of the county of Essex in scripture language, and saying with sincerity, "peace be within your walls, and plenty within your dwellings! may your sons grow up like young plants! may your garners be full and plenteous with all manner of store! may your sheep bring forth thousands and ten thousands in your fields! may your oxen be strong to labour, that there be no decay, no leading into captivity, nor complaining in your streets! may you, as good Christians, long enjoy the blessings of a free, a happy, and a glorious Constitution!"

After the ceremony, the whole moved in procession to Bush Fair Common, where upwards of four hundred dined in a large booth prepared for the occasion. In the evening there was a dance for the ladies. Nothing could exceed the mirth and conviviality of the company, who expressed themselves highly satisfied with every part of this day's entertainment.

PRESENTATION OF COLOURS TO THE HAMBLEDON VOLUNTEERS.

The Hambledon Volunteers, commanded by Major Palmer, had their colours presented to them on the 31st ult. by Mrs. Richards, whose address to the Major on the occasion was peculiarly appropriate and energetic. The colours, which were worked by the Miss Richards's, and are an elegant display of their taste, were consecrated at the drum head, with a suitable prayer, by the Rev. Mr. Mangle. The corps then fired three vollies, and afterwards went to church, where they heard an excellent sermon, from the words of Joshua, "Be strong and of good courage." They then returned to the field, where they went through their different firings in a very masterly manner.—The ground was kept by some of the Petersfield and Portsdown cavalry.

THE ART OF ANGLING.

HOW TO MAKE THE PALMER AND MAY FLY.

THERE have been various disputes whether the palmer's ſhould be made with wings, or not, all exceedingly idle and futile, therefore I dare venture to ſay they ſhould not, nor will I ever recant from what I aver, until ſome one can aſſure me for a truth, that they have ſeen a caterpillar, or worm with wings; a ſpecies of which they certainly are. No one as yet has ever given an account how to make the palmer-worms, but it has been ſo erroneous, dark, and unintelligible, that it would be impoſſible for a tyro in the art of angling to make either head or tail of it; therefore, I ſhall inform the reader how to perform it, in ſo plain and eaſy a manner, that if he has got a grain of mechaniſm in his compoſition, he will fully comprehend the method; but if after all he ſhould find himſelf at a loſs, the only thing I can recommend him to do is, to ſee ſome ſkilful hand make both the Palmer and May-fly.

Firſt, lay all the materials by the ſide of you, viz. half a yard of fine round even ſilk worm gut; half a yard of red ſilk well waxed with wax of the ſame colour; a hook, the ſize No. 6, a needle; ſome ſtrands of an Oſtrich's feather, and a fine red hackle: then take the hook and hold it by the bent between the fore finger and thumb of your left hand, with the ſhank towards your right hand, and with the point and beard of the hook, not under your fingers, but nearly parallel with the tops of them: afterwards take the ſilk and hold it likewiſe about the middle of it, with your hook, one part laying along the inſide of it to your left hand, the other to the right; then take that part of the ſilk which lies towards your right hand, between the fore finger and thumb of that hand, and holding that part towards your left tight along the inſide of the hook, whip that to the right three or four times round the ſhank of the hook towards the right hand; after which, take the ſilk worm gut and lay either of its ends along the inſide of the ſhank of the hook, till it comes near the bent of it; then hold the hook, ſilk and gut, tight between the fore finger and thumb of your left hand, and afterwards give that part of the ſilk to your right hand, three or four whips more over both hook and gut till it comes near the end of the ſhank, and make a loop and faſten it tight; then whip it neatly again over both ſilk, gut, and hook, till it comes near the bent of the hook, after which make another loop and faſten it again; then, if the gut ſhould reach further than the bent of the hook, cut it off, and your hook will be whipped on, and the parts of the ſilk hang from the bent of it.

Having proceeded ſo far, wax the longeſt end of the ſilk again, and take three or four ſtrands of an Oſtrich's feather; and holding them and the hook as in the firſt poſition, the feathers to the left hand, and the roots of them in the bent of the hook, with the ſilk that you waxed laſt, whip them three or four times round; make a loop, and faſten them tight; then turning the ſtrands to the right hand, and twiſting them and the ſilk together, with your fore finger and thumb of your right hand, wind them round the ſhank of the hook till you come to the place where you firſt faſtened, then make a loop and faſten them again; if the ſtrands ſhould not be long enough to wind as far as is neceſſary round the the ſhank, when the ſilk gets bare, you muſt twiſt others on it. Having performed this, take your ſciſſars and cut the body of the palmer into an oval form, that is, ſmall at the bent and the end of the ſhank, but full in the center; do not cut too much of the dubbing off. Now both the ends of the ſilk are ſeparated, one at the bent, another at the end of the ſhank, wax them both again; then take the hackle, hold the ſmall end of it between the fore finger and thumb of your left hand, and ſtroke the fibres of it with thoſe of your right the contrary way from which they are formed: hold your hook as in the firſt poſition, and place the point of the hackle in its bent, with that ſide which grows neareſt the cock upwards, and then whip it tight to the hook; but in faſtening it, tie as few fibres in as you can poſſibly avoid. The hackle being faſt, take it by the great end, and keeping the ſide neareſt the cock to the left hand, begin with your right hand to wind it up the ſhank upon the dubbing, ſtopping every ſecond turn, and holding what you have wound, tight with your left fingers, whilſt with the needle you pick out the fibres you will unavoidably take in. Proceed in this manner till you come to the place where you firſt faſtened, and where an end of the ſilk is, then clip off thoſe fibres of the hackle which you held between your finger and thumb, cloſe to the ſtem, and hold the ſtem cloſe to the hook; afterwards take the ſilk in your right hand, and whip the ſtem very faſt to the hook, then make a loop and faſten it tight. Take your pen-knife, and if that part of the ſtem next the ſhank of the hook, is as long as the part of the hook which is bare, pare it fine, wax your ſilk, and bind it neatly on the remaining bare part of the hook, then faſten the ſilk tight, and ſpread ſome ſhoemaker's wax very lightly on your laſt binding; after that, clip off the ends of the remaining ſilk both at the ſhank and bent of the hook, and all fibres that ſtart or ſtand ill conditioned, and the whole is completed.

This is called the palmer-fly, or plain hackle, and may, inſtead of the Oſtrich's feather above mentioned, be dubbed with black ſpaniel's fur, and is a very excellent killer. There are three more palmer's which are all to be made in the ſame manner as I have laid down, only with different articles, which are as follow:

Great Palmer, or Hackle.

Dubbed the ſame as the plain hackle with the ſtrands off an Oſtrich's feather, or a black ſpaniel's fur, and wrapped with red peacock's hackle untrimmed, that is, leaving the whole length of the hackle ſtaring out (for ſometimes the fibres of the hackle are to be ſhortened all over, ſometimes barbed only a little, and ſometimes cloſe underneath) leaving the whole length of fibres on the top, or back of the fly, which makes it ſwim better, and on a whirling round water, kills great fiſh.

Golden Palmer, or Hackle.

The ſame dubbing, ribbed with gold twiſt, and a red hackle over all.

Silver Hackle.

Made with a black body alſo, ſilver twiſt over that, and a red hackle over all.

The variation that is to be obſerved in making the gold and ſilver palmer's is this, that when you whip the end of the hackle to the bent of the hook, you muſt alſo do the ſame to the gold or ſilver twiſt, and firſt wind either of them on the dubbing, obſerving that they lie flat on it, and then faſten off;

after-

afterwards proceed with the hackle as directed; or you may wind the hackle on the dubbing first, and rib the body with either of the twists afterwards.

These are the standard hackles in fly fishing, and are taken any month in the year, from nine to eleven in the morning, and from one to three in the evening, and upon any water; though you must have different sizes of them, and dubbed with different colours, that you may always be able to suit either a clear, or a dark water, or a bright, or cloudy atmosphere; observing that small light-coloured flies are for clear water and skies; and the larger, for dark and cloudy ones.

These palmers (as I said before) being taken every month in the year, when I come to treat of the flies proper for each month, I shall not take any notice again of the four which I have set down; for that would be totally unnecessary; but the others that deviate in their size and dubbing from the general rule, will be fully expressed.

The angler should always try the palmers first, when he fishes in a river that he is unaccustomed to; even in that which he constantly uses, without he knows what fly is on the water, and they should never be changed till he does; the only way to come to the true knowledge of which, he must observe an old established rule laid down for that purpose; and as it is poetically described by Mr. Gay, we shall give it in our poetical department.

A CURIOUS AND AGREEABLE WAGER, WHICH YOU ARE SURE OF WINNING.

ADDRESS some person in the company, and say, Madam, or Sir, have you a watch, a ring, or etwee, or any other trinket? Begin by examining what has been given you, in order to form an idea of its value, since you are to lay your bet considerably under the intrinsic value of the trinket, to avoid being duped.

Suppose what has been offered to you is a watch, you are to propose a guinea as a wager against it, saying to the lady or gentleman, I lay you a guinea that you do not say three times, my watch; when it is put on the table, and your wager is accepted, ask the person, presenting him his watch, What is that? he will not fail to answer, it is My Watch.

Present him afterwards another object, making him the same question; suppose the object you present to be a pen, a piece of paper, or any other thing. If the person names the object you present, he has lost; if, on the contrary, he is on his guard, and answers My Watch, you must then say, Sir, I see very well I have lost, for if you say once more, My Watch, you must certainly win, but if I lose what will you give me? the person being always on his guard, will answer again, My Watch; then appealing to his words, you will take the watch, and leave him the stake.

For the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

HINTS TO SPORTSMEN.

QUALIFICATION to keep a gun or dog, is only to hunt in a man's own ground.

Game-keepers cannot, merely as such, keep dogs, guns, or nets, but must for that purpose be duly qualified by law.

If I drive a deer that is come upon my lands off them, with my dogs, and the dogs follow the deer into into the park, and kill it there, the owner of the park may kill the dogs.

If the keeper follows a buck which is chased out of the park, though he who hunts him kills him in his own ground, yet the keeper may enter into his ground, and retake the deer.

If A starts an hare in my close, and kills her there, it is my hare; but if A hunts her into B's, and kills her there, then it is the hunters.

But if A starts an hare in his own close, and hunts her into B's, and kills her there, yet the original property is still in A, and the coursing is a continuation of the property.

You cannot justify your entry for hares into the freehold of another.

If a qualified person shoots game in his own land, and it falls into another man's ground, the sportsman may follow and take the bird, and is not punishable, but only for his entry into the other man's ground.

But where the game flies into another person's warren, and the sportsman kills him there, the carrying away, as well as the entry, is tertious.

A man may follow his hound in pursuit of game, into another man's ground, being found in his own.

If a man springs game in his own warren, and shoots it in another's, the sportsman cannot enter in order to take up the bird.

In some places a man may stand in one county, and shoot into two or three, so that the venue must be laid where the offence was committed, and that is, where the party stood when he shot, not where the object was which he shot at.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE STRUCTURE, ECONOMY, AND DISEASES OF THE FOOT OF THE HORSE, AND ON THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF SHOEING.

BY EDWARD COLEMAN,

Professor of the Veterinary College, Principal Veterinary Surgeon to the British Cavalry, and to his Majesty's Most Honourable Board of Ordnance, and Honorary Member of the Board of Agriculture. 12s. Johnson.

MR. Coleman proceeds with his subject as follows:

"The shoe that we invariably apply to flat soles, will be found consistent with the principle that has been so repeatedly inforced, namely, that of resting only on the crust, preventing corns, and allowing the quarters to expend. The form of this shoe is concave at its upper part, opposite to the flat or convex portion of the sole, with a narrow surface, only equal to the crust and nails: but at the quarters, and heels, where the sole can be made concave, there it is necessary to employ a flat surface. It therefore follows, that if the sole at any part be necessarily flat, there the shoe opposite to the sole must be concave, and the seat for the crust no wider than the nails: but where the sole can be made concave, a flat shoe may be applied; and as the sole, at quarters, can be preserved concave, so the quarter of the shoe may be flat. The concavity of the upper surface of the shoe attached to the toe of the crust, has no influence whatever in producing contraction of the heels; but where the lower edges of the crust at the quarters are confined between two fixed points, their contraction must ensue. If the bars and sole at the heels have been destroyed ſtroyed by the Farrier, ſo as to prevent the poſſibility of making a concavity between the bars and the cruſt, and if the horſe be obliged to work, then it will be neceſſary to employ a bar ſhoe, to reſt on the frog, and raiſed from the ſole at the heels. But where the ſole can be preſerved only for a few weeks, it will grow ſufficiently to be made concave with a drawing knife between the bars and cruſt; and then the heels of the ſhoe may be flat, without touching the ſole.

"Mr. Saintbel employed a ſhoe with a flat upper ſurface; but, from not attending to the very important operation of removing the ſole under the heels of the ſhoe, and the indiſcriminate application of a flat ſurface at every part of the ſhoe, to every kind of hoof, it frequently failed of ſucceſs.

"The beſt form for the external ſurface of the ſhoe, is a regular concavity; that is, the common ſhoe reverſed. This ſhoe leaves the hoof of the ſame figure when ſhod, as before its application. And it is evident, that a concavity has more points of contact with pavement and other convex bodies, than a flat or convex ſurface, and that the horſe is conſequently more ſecure on his legs. A ſhoe that is flat externally, may preſerve the hoof equally well in health; but this form is not ſo well calculated to prevent the horſe from ſlipping as a concavity.

"We have already obſerved, that when horſes are ſhod in the uſual manner, four nails are placed in each quarter of the cruſt, nearly oppoſite; and that this practice confines the growth of cruſt, and contracts the heels. To obviate this defect, the ſhoe ſhould be nailed all round the toe of the cruſt. The toe is by much the thickeſt part of the cruſt in the fore hoofs*, and therefore capable of receiving nails, with leſs danger of wounding the ſenſible parts within, than at the quarters, where the cruſt is generally thin: and, by preſerving the greater part of the quarters free from nails, the heels are allowed to expand. If, however, the whole quarters, and heels of the ſhoe have no nails, the great length of lever from the laſt nail to the extremity of the heel, will be very liable to diſplace the nails, and to occaſion the loſs of the ſhoe.

"About one inch and half of the heels of the ſhoe may be generally left without nails; but for hunting, it is requiſite to place one more nail on the outſide quarter. The outſide is thicker than the inſide cruſt; and if the nails are kept from the heel on the inſide, the quarters of the hoof will not be confined; but, where the cruſt is thin or broken, this length of ſhoe, without nails, would be too long. It is a great inconvenience to loſe a ſhoe at any time, but particularly ſo in the field; and as hunters are liable to be in deep and ſtiff ground, they require the ſhoes to be more firmly connected with the cruſt, than horſes uſed to pavement, or a turnpike road. As this practice of nailing at the toe prevents the nails from forming two oppoſite fixed points, and permits the cruſt to expand, it ſhould be always adopted.

The nail holes, and the nails, employed at the College, are made very differently from thoſe in common uſe. The nail holes are ſtamped with a punch of a wedge like form, and the heads of the nails are of the ſame figure, namely, conical, and received into the nail holes; and then, ſo long as the ſhoe remains, ſo long there are heads to the nails.

This kind of nail is the invention of Mr. Spencer, a very ingenious horſe nail maker; and although the quality of the iron, and the form of

of the nail, render this article infinitely superior, not only in shape, but durability, yet the price is not more than seven-pence per thousand above the common nails. And, from the experience I have had of their utility, I am persuaded that the shoes are not only more securely attached to the hoof, but that the smith will find it very economical to use them universally in his practice. But, if the increase of expence were an object of consideration, it is of much more consequence not to lose a shoe, and particularly in hunting.

The head of the common nail is not conical, but nearly square; and no part is received into the nail hole. When the nail is driven into the shoe up to the head, the farrier generally continues to hammer with great violence; and, as the nail hole cannot admit the head, the texture of the nail, contiguous to the head, is shivered, and in a few days is broken; whereas the head of Mr. Spencer's nail operates as a wedge: the more it is hammered, the more firmly it is connected with the nail hole, so as to become part of the shoe. Moreover, the head of the common nail, when not injured by the farrier, projects beyond the shoe, and when worn out, the shoe is liable to come off. This accident will more frequently happen, if the nails are placed in the old nail holes of the crust; before the nail holes of the shoe are stamped, the farrier should examine the situation of the former nails; and by having new crust for the nails, the shoe will be more firmly connected with the hoof.

Horses that are employed in the shafts of heavy carriages, require an artificial stop for the hind feet, and, in hilly situations, for the fore feet. But where the frogs are sound and prominent, and the horse not employed to resist more than his natural weight, (if there be no ice on the ground) artificial stops are useless.

It is of great importance for the frogs of the hind feet to be as much in contact with the ground as possible. Where the heels of the crust are not kept low, and the horny frog prevented from receiving its due degree of pressure, horses are very subject to violent inflammations, and suppurations of the sensible frog, and canker, extending even to the sole.

At Woolwich, where I have had the honour to see this practice particularly attended to, we have had no such disease; although I have seen numbers of the same kind of horses incurably diseased with canker, from the common practice of shoeing. This practice is, to cut the frog, leave the heels of the crust very high, and turn up the outside heel of the shoe only. The frog then becomes soft and diseased; and the internal part of the extremity necessarily supports so much weight, as frequently to occasion splints and spavins.

It is very obvious, that the raising one side of the shoe, and depressing the other, is unnatural, and must require the inside quarter of the hoof to bear more than its due proportion of weight. To remedy this defect, some farriers turn up both heels of the shoe: but this practice is very often productive of still greater mischief; for the projection of the shoe on the inside, bruises the soft parts above the hoof of the opposite hind leg, and a sinus very soon forms between the hoof and soft parts, called by farriers, a quittor.

The shoe employed at the Veterinary College, prevents both diseases. We turn up the outer heel of the shoe only: but, in order to guard against unequal pressure, the horn of the outer quarter is cut away, while the internal part is

is preserved. Where the hoof is sufficiently thick to admit of removal on the outside heel, in the same proportion as we raise the heel of the shoe, then the weight of the animal, on stones and hard ground, is mutually supported; and on soft ground, the heels of both quarters of the shoe will be nearly equal.

THE GAME OF TRUMPS.

THERE are several ways of playing at this game, which all agree in some things, but differ in others that are essential; for which reason we shall here particularly describe the different methods of playing it.

You take a common pack of cards, that is, the same that are used at piquet, in which the cards stand in their natural order, which is as follows—king, queen, knave, ace, ten, nine, eight, and seven.

This game is played one against one, or two against two, or sometimes three against three: when they play two and two, or three and three, those that are of the same party, place themselves on the same side of the table, and their adversaries on the opposite side; and those of the same party communicate their game to each other by shewing it only, and play according to their rank; but whether they play in that manner, or one against one, they begin by shuffling the cards in order to see who is to deal; and as the deal is disadvantageous, he of the two parties who cuts the highest card obliges the other to deal, which he does, after shuffling the cards, and having them cut by his adversary, or by his left-hand man. If there are several players, he deals each five cards, and takes as many to himself, by once two and once three, and then turns up the first card of the stock, which is the trump, and which remains upon the stock.

The eldest hand then plays such card as he thinks proper, which suit the others are obliged to follow if they have it, and to win if they can; or trump it, if they have any trumps, and have none of that suit.

He of the two, or of the two parties that makes three tricks, wins and sets up one for the game; and if he makes the vole, he sets up two.

If one of the players has a bad hand, he is at liberty to give up the game to the other; and, if the adverse party, or the adversary, when they play tête a tête, will not accept of it, he loses two, if he does not make up the vole, instead of gaining one, if he had accepted it.

LAWS OF THE GAME OF TRUMPS.

1. The pack is false when there is a faced card.

2. He who deals too many, or too few cards, or any how deals wrong, takes off one from his score, if he has any; if not, the opposite party marks one.

3. He who undertakes the vole, and does not make it, loses two games.

4. He who plays before his turn, loses one game.

5. He who plays in the suit led, but does not win it when he could, loses one game.

6. He, who having none of the suit led, might have trumped it, and did not, loses one game, even though he that played before him had trumped with an higher trump than his.

7. He that renounces, loses two games, or the party, as shall be agreed at the beginning.

8. He that is detected in changing ing his cards with his associate, or with the tricks that are made, loses the party.

9. Whoever quits the party before it is finished, loses it.

There is a great deal of art in playing this game, and it requires more attention to play it well than at first may seem necessary.

The common party is of five games, or points, and you play as many parties as you please.

ANOTHER MANNER OF PLAYING THE GAME OF TRUMPS.

This method is better known than the former; it observes in general all the rules before mentioned; the pack is the same; they see in the same manner who is to deal; they deal five cards to each player; and the only difference is, that four, five, or more persons may play together, without having any connection with each other; on the contrary, each endeavours to make the most he can for himself; and when two of the players make each of them two tricks, he that made the first two marks the game, the same as if he had three.

You are to observe, that when a player renounces, or commits any other fault by which he loses a point, the others do not augment their points for that; but when he that committed the fault wins, he does not score it till he has given full satisfaction to the other players. This game is very diverting, and of great commerce.

A THIRD METHOD OF PLAYING THE GAME OF TRUMPS.

This method is the same as the last, with regard to the players each playing for himself, but it differs in this, that the ace is the highest card in the game, and consequently takes the king; the other cards follow their natural order.

There is also an advantage here for the dealer; for example, if after dealing five cards to each, he turns up an ace, he pillages, that is, he takes the ace that makes the trump, and discards one from his hand as he thinks proper; and if there should be more cards of the same suit that follow it immediately on the top of the stock, he may take them likewise, and place so many of the others to the game in their room.

It is the same if one of the other players has the ace of trumps in his hand, he pillages also; that is, he takes off the trump turned up, and the cards that follow it, if they are of the same suit, and places as many others on the stock in their room, that he may not have too many cards in his hand. This method of playing the game of trumps, is called, playing with the ace that pillages; the rest of the game is played as in the first manner, and the party consists of as many, or as few points as you please.

The game may be played in this manner, and without the ace that pillages: it may be diversified by playing it sometimes one way, and sometimes another, still having recourse for the general rules to the laws that are laid down in the first method of playing it.

VENETIAN ANTIQUITIES.

THE four antique horses brought from Venice to Paris are to take their station in the Place de la Revolution, formerly La Place de Louis Quinze. They are to be harnessed to a triumphal Car, in which the Goddess of Liberty is seated: the whole to be guarded by a suitable enclosure.

These

These valuable remains of antiquity are thus described by a late celebrated traveller :

" I know not whether you have ever seen the four antique horses at the Cathedral of St. Mark. They are the finest remains of the old statuary that I have ever seen, or expect to see, of their kind. They are of brass, gilt, and the gilding is as old as the figures. Little of it is now to be seen in any degree of splendour, the rest is greenish or blackish, as it is more or less rusted. There is a knowledge and accuracy in the design of them that astonishes me. The execution of them is without blemish. They are supposed to be the workmanship of the immortal Lysippys. There is an air of nature and of fire that amazes the most ignorant observers. They were brought to Venice in 1201, from the plunder of Constantinople. They were originally placed on Nero's Circus. Constantine removed them, amongst other things of infinite value, and almost infinite in number, to Constantinople, when he removed the seat of empire thither. The Venetians are sufficiently aware of their value."

HIGH COURT OF DELEGATES.

HARRIET Campbell, wife of Capt. Charles Collin Campbell, against her Husband.

This was an appeal on behalf of Mrs. Campbell against a sentence of divorce obtained against her for adultery with Archibald Hook, Esq.

On the hearing of this cause, it appeared to the Court, that these parties were married the 17th of February, 1780, according to the rights and ceremonies of the Kirk of Scotland, in Edinburgh, in the presence of her mother and other persons, and lived together as husband and wife till November, 1787, when Captain Campbell being ordered to Scotland, left his wife with her mother at Boulogne, and they afterwards came to London.

In December, 1788, he left her with her mother, being obliged to go to the West Indies, and made the best provision he could for her in his absence ; he sent her a draft of Fifty Pounds in a letter, being all he could spare, but which letter, with the draft inclosed, were returned to him unopened.

In the summer of 1788, whilst the Captain was with his regiment at Hilsea Barracks, Archibald Hook, Esq. a Major in the East India Company's service, and uncle by the mother's side to Mrs. Campbell, arrived in London from India, and immediately went to his sister's house, where Mr. Campbell resided, and staid there some time, during which it appeared in evidence, he alienated the affections of his niece from her husband.

The servants deposed that they had frequently seen him go to her bed-room, and observed the marks of two persons in her bed, with a great many circumstances improper for narration. They also deposed, that they had seen them at the inns where they slept whilst on different tours, and once in particular that a violent quarrel happened between Major Hook and Mrs. Campbell, in which he said, " you are a w——;" to which she replied, " I am a w——, but to you only ; you are a villain and a scoundrel, and ought to have been a father, protector, and friend to me, instead of which you have been my ruin," and then instantly screamed out, " Oh, my husband, my husband !"

In August, 1791, they went to Swansea, and carried on the same improper conduct, and also in the summer summer of 1792, at Eastbourne, in Sussex. This series of conduct continued till Captain Campbell's return to England in October 1792; soon after which he commenced an action in the Court of King's Bench against Major Hook, for criminal conversation with his wife, and recoverd Three Thousand Pounds damages, and commenced a prosecution in the Ecclesiastical Court, whose sentence of divorce was pronounced.

Against this sentence she appealed to the Court of Arches, who affirmed the sentence of the Court below.

From this sentence she also appealed to the High Court of Delegates, and the same coming out before them, the Court was pleased to confirm the above sentences, and to condemn the party appealing in costs.

PARISIAN GALLANTRY.

THE following curious anecdote is given in the Ami des Loix of the 16th instant.

"As complete a revolution, it appears, has taken place in our manners as in our political institutions.—We are no longer to envy the days of chivalry for their romantic and exalted notion, as the following narration will fully prove:—a rich Jeweller of St Honore, was lately informed by his domestic, that his wife was in bed with a young and handsome Deputy. "It is impossible," said the master—"It is certain," replied the servant.—"Take care of what you say."—"I say but what I have seen."—"I wish to see it also."—Before the jeweller went up stairs to his faithless spouse, he, without the knowledge of the servant, raised a ladder to the window of the chamber. They then went up stairs: the jeweller entering first, shut the door, and having seen enough to convince him, said to his rival, "Let us have no disturbance, Citizen; let us preserve appearances. To-morrow, at four o'clock, you will meet me in the Champs Elysees. Every thing is prepared for your flight: get out by this window."—When this was done, the considerate Cornuto opened the door, and, calling in the servant, desired him to look around, observing, at the same time, "how deceitful were appearances."—Peter rubbed his eyes, stared, and acknowledged his mistake.—On the following day, the jeweller went to the rendezvous, met his antagonist, whom he wounded, was wounded at the same time himself, and thus returned covered with glory to his Belle Infidelle!"

RIDING ON HORSEBACK RECOMMENDED.

RIDING is not only conducive to health and long life, but to study and speculation. It not only braces the nerves of the body, but enlivens the faculties of the soul, the one being actuated by the other, and their sensations so woven together and intermixed, that where the proper temperament of the body is not preserved, the faculties of the soul cannot exert themselves with vigour. The motion of riding keeps up the human economy in the manner described by Juvenal, "mens sana in corpore sans;" "the body sound, and the understanding clear." And at the same time it helps digestion, it drives away all those noxious vapours, so fatal to the English nation in particular, and so destructive to judgment and reason in general. It is performed at less expence of spirits than walking, or any other exercise, and and ſeems to have been inſtituted by providence, at once the pleaſure and preſervation of mankind,

PUGILISM.

BATH, SEPTEMBER 8.

ON Monday a battle was fought in a field between Newton and Saltford, which, for its duration, and the deſperate fury of the combatants, can ſcarcely be equalled in the annals of pugiliſm. Charles Williams, a lockſmith, of Bath, and Robert Hunt, a turner, of Briſtol, (commonly called Little Bulldog), met at the above place to box for twenty guineas. They were both ſmall men, but nearly matched; what the former exceeded the latter in length of arms, the other had in ſtrength. Williams evidently poſſeſſed the greateſt ſhare of ſcience, but Hunt moſt hardihood. From a knowledge of his repeated triumphs, the Briſtol people had ſo high an opinion of their townſman, that the odds were in his favour before, and during the greateſt part of the conteſt, though they at times changed rather in favour of the Bath man. At length, having fought about fourſcore hard rounds, in two hours and twenty minutes, a laſt apparently determined effort took place, in which Hunt received ſo violent a blow that he was unable to hold up his head again, and the victory was conſequently decided in favour of Williams. Hunt, it is ſaid, had a finger broke early in the battle, and long before the concluſion his jawbone was fractured. Williams is ſo much bruiſed, particularly about the body, that he has been heard to declare that nothing ſhall ever prevail on him to engage in a pitch battle again.

For the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

FEMALE VOLUNTEERS.

THERE is no policy more profound than to blend amuſement with buſineſs. The Merchant on 'Change has ſuch a pleaſure in meeting his friends, and hearing the news of the day, as makes him forget the fatigues of a journey from Epping foreſt, and eaſes the anxiety his bargains may create. The Member of a Volunteer Aſſociation would ſomewhat ſlacken in his aſſiduity, if it were not for the gaiety of his dreſs, the healthfulneſs and novelty of the exerciſe, and the ſociety he meets on parade. His evenings are much better and more agreeably ſpent in ſhouldering his muſket, than ſoaking in a porter-houſe.

It ſhould be the policy of a wiſe government to turn all the amuſements of the People to the advantage of the ſtate; and we know of none that would be of more advantage, than converting the watering places into ſummer encampments, or garriſons, or military poſts, call them what you pleaſe, to reſiſt an invaſion of the enemy; and as a certain means of inſpiring the troops with courage, the Ladies ſhould be embodied in corps, and ſhould carry arms as well as the men. The ſituations of the watering places ſeem to have been choſen for this very purpoſe. Margate is well calculated to protect the mouth of the Thames, or intercept an enemy in its way through Kent to the metropolis; while South End would anſwer the ſame purpoſe with regard to Eſſex, and would protect the river in a ſtill cloſer manner. By the way of Brighton is the ſhorteſt cut from the ſea to London, a road which it has been feared the French would take.

Here then would be a camp of great strength (fashion); while Tunbridge Wells, lying half-way between Margate and Brighton, might be the seat of an army of reserve to aid to either of the other two as occasion required; and Bognor-rocks, Worthing, Eastbourne, Hastings, Dover, &c. might serve as alarm posts. Southampton and the Isle of Wight would protect Portsmouth; Weymouth and Sidmouth would cover Exeter, Bath and Bristol: while Swansea would guard the mouth of Bristol Channel and Wales; Scarborough would take care of the North; and Lowestoffe, Yarmouth and Aldborough, would cover the middle part of the Island against the Dutch. To overawe our domestic enemies, we would have Harrowgate, Buxton, Cheltenham, Bristol Hot Wells, and above all, Bath, which might be made a great winter barrack.

In this plan it will be obvious, that the Ladies must form the principal corps. Without the influence of their example, it will make but little progress, nor would it have the necessary effect without their personal exertions. The pleasures of the Parade might be substituted for those of the Ball-room or Library; and provided the rank and file were male and female alternately, it would be quite as amusing, and much more healthy to wheel to the right or left, or march in files, than to cast off and hands across—and the quick or slow step might be a good substitute for the country dance or minuet. Nay, with a view to domestic prudence, this change would be welcome to every sore-headed husband. In a dance there are every now and then "a squeeze of the hand, and a pinch of the toe; a clasp round the waist, or a mutual leer." In the military exercise no such inflammatory communications would take place, and the Proctors in Doctors Commons might starve.—How much more honourable for the ladies to be preparing to defend all they hold dear, by learning the military exercise in the open air, than jigging in a noisome room till midnight? How much more patriotic would be the private drill, than parties at cards? and how much more grateful to every loyal husband, to see his wife and daughters knocking about brown Bess, than rattling the dice at a raffle?

There would be no great difficulty in forming the ladies into corps. For as they always go to the public walk of the place, the Steine, the Esplanade, or the Cliffs; as they flock together to see and be seen, it would only be to embody them as they arrived—there is no doubt they would muster strong: and the "Margate Matrons," the "Brighton Beauties," or the "Cheltenham Charmers," might vie even with the "City Light Horse," in martial prowess.

In forming Military Volunteer Associations, one of the most difficult points to determine is the uniform. With the ladies this would be peculiarly easy to settle. Let the Dutchesses of Devonshire or Rutland, or Mrs. Jordan, introduce a helmet-cap and curricle jacket, or some such fashion, and instantly the whole corps will adopt it. How much better to see a grand review of such corps, than a masquerade at Dandy Lion!

The bathing houses would make excellent sentry boxes, and practice would prepare the ladies to oppose the enemy's landing, chin deep, in water. Mr. Pollen should be appointed Barrack Master General, and old Q. Inspector General. But it would occupy too much of our Magazine, to enter into a detailed statement of the arrangements that might be made to complete so excellent an undertaking, which, we hope, Mr. Pollen will bring before Parliament.

ANECDOTE

ANECDOTE OF DRYDEN.

DRYDEN, with all his understanding, was weak enough to be fond of judicial astrology, and used to calculate the nativity of his children. When his lady was in labour with his son Charles, he being told it was decent to withdraw, laid his watch on the table, begging one of the ladies, then present, in a most solemn manner, to take exact notice of the very minute the child was born, which she did, and acquainted him with it. About a week after, when his lady was pretty well recovered, Mr. Dryden took occasion to tell her, that he had been calculating the child's nativity, and observed, with grief, that he was born in an evil hour, for Jupiter, Venus, and the Sun, were all under the earth, and the Lord of his ascendant afflicted with a hateful square of Mars and Saturn. "If he lives to arrive at the eighth year," says he, "he will go near to die a violent death on his very birth-day; but if he should escape, (as I see but small hopes) he will, in the twenty-third year, be under the same evil direction; and if he should escape that also, the thirty-third or thirty-fourth year is, I fear"——Here he was interrupted by the immoderate grief of his lady, who could no longer hear calamity prophesied to befal her son.

The time at last came, and August was the inauspicious month in which young Dryden was to enter into the eighth year of his age. The Court being at progress, and Mr. Dryden at leisure, he was invited to the country seat of the Earl of Berkshire, his brother-in-law, to keep the long vacation with him at Charlton, in Wilts: his lady was invited to her uncle Mordaunt's, to pass the remainder of the summer. When they came to divide the children, Lady Elizabeth would have him take John, and suffer her to take Charles; but Mr. Dryden was too absolute, and they parted in anger—he took Charles with him, and she was obliged to be content with John.

When the fatal day came, the anxiety of the lady's spirits occasioned such an effervescence of blood, as threw her into so violent a fever, that her life was despaired of, till a letter came from Mr. Dryden, reproving her for her womanish credulity, and assuring her that her child was well, which recovered her spirits; and, in six weeks after, she received an ecclarcissement of the whole affair.

Mr. Dryden, either through fear of being reckoned superstitious, or thinking it a science beneath his study, was extremely cautious of letting any one know that he was a dealer in astrology, therefore could not excuse his absence on his son's anniversary from a general hunting match Lord Berkshire had made, to which all the adjacent gentlemen were invited. When he went out, he took care to set the boy a double exercise in the latin tongue, (which he always taught his children himself), with a strict charge not to stir out of the room till his return, well knowing the task he had set him would take up a longer time.

Charles was performing his duty in obedience to his father; but, as ill fate would have it, the stag made towards the house, and the noise alarming the servants, they hasted out to see the sport. One of them took young Dryden by the hand, and led him out also to see it; when, just as they came to a gate, the stag being at bay with the dogs, made a bold push, and leaped over the court wall, which was very low and very old, and the dogs following, threw down a part of the wall ten yards in length, under which Charles Dryden lay buried.

He

He was immediately dug out, and after six weeks languishing, in a dangerous way, he recovered. So far Dryden's prediction was fulfilled.

In the twenty-third year of his age, Charles fell from the top of an old tower belonging to the Vatican at Rome, occasioned by a swimming in his head, with which he was seized, the heat of the day being excessive. He again recovered, but was ever after in a languishing weekly state.

In the thirty-third year of his age, he was unhappily drowned at Windsor. He had, with another gentleman, swam twice over the Thames, but returning a third time, it was supposed he was taken with the cramp, because he called out for help, though too late. Thus the father's calculation proved but too true.

NAVAL COURT MARTIAL.

MINUTES of the proceedings of a Court Martial, assembled and held on board his Majesty's ship Prince, before Cadiz, on Tuesday the 12th of June, 1798, in pursuance of an order from the Right Hon. the Earl of St. Vincent, Knight of the Bath, Admiral of the Blue, and Commander in Chief of his Majesty's ships and vessels employed, and to be employed, in the Mediterranean, &c. &c. &c. to try the Right Hon. Lord Henry Paulet, Captain of his Majesty's ship Thalia, on a charge exhibited against him by Lieutenant Robert Forbes, of the said ship, for behaving in an infamous, scandalous, and oppressive manner, by striking him publicly on the quarter deck, when in the execution of his office, thereby committing a breach of the thirty-third Article of War.

PRESENT,

Sir Roger Curtis, Bart. Rear-Admiral of the Red, and Second Officer in the Command, &c. &c. President.

Sir William Parker, Bart. Rear-Admiral of the Red.

Sir John Orde, Bart. Rear-Admiral of the White.

Thomas Lenox Frederick, Esq. Rear-Admiral of the Blue.

Sir Robert Calder, Knt. Captain of the Fleet.

CAPTAINS,

Cuthbert Collingwood,
Henry Savage,
John Child Purvis,
John Markham,
Peter Aplin,
John Knight,
George Murray.
William O'Brien Drury.

Lieutenant Francis Williams, of the Marines, sworn.

Lieut. Forbes. Were you on the quarter deck of the Thalia on the forenoon of the 4th of June?

A. I was.

Lieut. Forbes. Relate to the Court what you saw or heard pass between his Lordship and me?

A. The first thing I heard his Lordship say to Lieutenant Forbes was, "If this is your method of "carrying on duty, where you "learnt it, God in Heaven knows, "for I do not."—A short time afterward, I heard his Lordship charge Lieut. Forbes with disrespect. Soon after his Lordship called to the captain of the maintop, and said, "I thought you had sailed "long enough with me, Mr. Rawlingson, to have known my method of carrying on the duty "better." On which Rawlinson said, "I thought Mr. Forbes had "ordered me." I neither saw nor heard any thing further.

Joseph

Joseph King, belonging to his Majesty's ship Thalia.

Lieut. Forbes. Was you at the wheel on the forenoon of the 4th of June?

A. Yes.

Lieut. Forbes. Tell the Court what words you heard pass between his Lordship and me, and whether you saw his Lordship strike me?

A. I was at the wheel. I heard Mr. Forbes hail the maintop, and told them to stand by to take the top gallant studding sails and royals in. Mr. Forbes went forward to the gangway, and hailed the foretop; I did not take notice what it was he said to the foretop. I did not hear; I was at the wheel whilst he was forward on the larboard gangway—the men that were in the maintop let the maintop gallant studding sail a great way down, and let go the weather royal sheet, and let the royal yard a great way down the mast. In the mean time Lord Henry came upon deck, and talked to Mr. Forbes very much; but I could not hear every word that he said to him; but I heard him tell Lieut. Forbes he did not do his duty in a manner like an officer. Mr. Forbes said, he did his duty as well as it lay in his power to do. My Lord said, if you do not do your duty better, upon his word and honour he would try him by a Court Martial. Mr. Forbes looked up in the maintop, and I saw my Lord strike him with his right hand. Mr. Forbes turned round, and said, "Recollect, my Lord, "you have struck me." I heard nothing else; I was relieved at the wheel at nine o'clock.

Sir R. Curtis. What part of Lieut. Forbes did his Lordship strike?

A. He struck the back part of his head; I can't tell whether it was with his hand or fist. I did not see him strike more than once. Lieutenant Forbes's back was towards Lord Henry, and he was looking up in the maintop. I do not know whether he was giving orders to the maintop or not.

Captain Purvis. Was the Captain talking to the Lieutenant at the instant he struck him?

A. Not at the instant, he had been speaking to him before.

Lord H. Paulet. Was I not very angry, and much agitated when speaking to Lieutenant Forbes?

A. Yes, my Lord was in a great passion.

Lord H. Paulet. Did I strike Lieutenant Forbes with an extended open hand, or an uplifted arm?

A. I can't say whether my Lord had a doubled fist, or an open hand.

Lord H. Paulet. In what manner did I touch him?

A. The evidence described the manner by sweeping his arm before the Court.

Lord H. Paulet. Do you not believe it possible for me to have stretched my arm out, as you have described, to slew Mr. Forbes round, or call his attention to me; and from the agitation I was then in, touched the back of his head or neck, instead of his shoulder, as I might have intended?

A. Such a thing might be, I cannot tell; I did not know my Lord's intentions.

Peter Hughes, Private Marine, belonging to his Majesty's ship Thalia, sworn.

Lieut. Forbes. Was you on the quarter-deck in the forenoon of the 4th of June?

A. I was.

Lieut. Forbes. State to the Court what words you heard pass between his Lordship and me at that time.

A. The first thing that began, the Captain came on the quarter-deck; to the best of my knowledge, he had given Mr. Forbes an order order to ſtand by to take in the royals and ſtudding-ſails. Mr. Forbes repeated the order to the men in the top. Mr. Forbes went forward on the larboard gangway, my Lord, came aft, and called out to the captain of the top, and aſked him how dare he begin to lower away without an order? Mr. Forbes returned off the larboard gangway; the Captain aſked him, what made him ſee the duty done ſo? and deſired he would look ſharper the next time. Mr. Forbes ſaid, he did not give an order only for the men to ſtand by to take them in. My Lord and Mr. Forbes had ſome words, I cannot recollect where: they were between the bittacle and the wheel, as near as poſſible on the larboard ſide of the quarter-deck. The Captain and Mr. Forbes had been talking, and Mr. Forbes turned his back, and looked into the top; as far as I underſtood, the Captain aſked Mr. Forbes, "Do you mean to inſult me, by turning your back to me?—I am your Captain." Mr. Forbes ſaid, "I did not mean to inſult you." The Captain, during the time he made mention of that word, ſtruck him with his open right hand on the back of the head; I was ſtanding by the mizen-maſt on the ſame ſide of the quarter-deck.

Lieut. Forbes. Did you hear me ſay to his Lordſhip that he ſtruck me?

A. I heard you ſay, "Recollect, my Lord, you ſtruck me."

Lieut. Forbes. What reply did his Lordſhip make to me then!

A. "I have."

Sir J. Orde. Did you ſee whether Lieut. Forbes took his hat off to Lord Henry when he came on deck, or when he was ſpeaking to him?

A. He did when he was ſpeaking to him on the larboard ſide of the quarter-deck; my Lord pulled off his hat firſt, and then Lieut. Forbes did.

Sir J. Orde. Had Lieut. Forbes his hat on when he received the blow you deſcribe to have been given, and did it fall off on the occaſion?

A. He had his hat on, and it did not fall off that I ſaw.

Sir J. Orde. Might not the words "I have," which you have deſcribed to have been made uſe of in reply by Lord Henry to Lieutenant Forbes, have been an anſwer to ſome other remark, than "Lord Henry, you have ſtruck me?"

A. His Lordſhip ſaid, "I have," inſtantly after the Lieutenant ſaid, "You have ſtruck me;" and I think it was an anſwer to it.

Lord H. Paulet. You have ſaid Mr. Forbes pulled his hat off, was it before or after you ſay I ſtruck him?

A. I cannot tell poſitively the time.

Lord H. Paulet. From the manner in which you have deſcribed I ſtruck Lieut. Forbes, do you not believe it poſſible for me to have ſtretched my arm out to ſlew Mr. Forbes round to call his attention to me; and from the agitation I was then in, might have touched the back of his head or neck inſtead of his ſhoulder, as I might have intended?

A. As far as my underſtanding, and the beſt of my opinion goes, it was intended as a blow.

Lord H. Paulet. Can you ſwear that I lifted my arm up, or aimed any blow at Mr. Forbes?

A. I can ſwear, that I ſaw the blow given.

Thomas Cox, Mariner, ſworn.

Lieut. Forbes. Was you on the quarter-deck on the 4th of June?

A. I was.

Lieut. Forbes. Did you ſee his Lordſhip ſtrike me at that time?

A. I will tell the gentleman what what I saw, and they may call it what they like.—I saw his Lordship hit Mr. Forbes a pat on the right side of his hat with his right hand.

Lieut. Forbes. Relate to the Court all that you heard and saw pass between his Lordship and me at that time.

A. I saw Mr. Forbes's back to his Lordship, and directly my Lord hit Mr. Forbes a pat on the side of the hat—" Mr. Forbes," said he, " do you turn your back to me when I am speaking to you?"—I saw Mr. Forbes turn to the right, very nigh to the right about, and I heard Mr. Forbes say to my Lord, " Recollect, my Lord, you struck me," and my Lord said, " I did." —I saw my Lord move a pace to the right, pull off his hat, and desired Mr. Forbes to do so likewise. —I heard my Lord say to Mr. Forbes, if he did not mind and do his duty better, he should be obliged to try him by a court-martial; and this was said both before and after the pat. I was standing on the larboard side, abreast of the mizen-mast, or rather before it.—His Lordship, before he stepped forward to give Mr. Forbes the pat, stood about three yards before me: Mr. Forbes was standing between the capstern and bittacle.

Sir R. Curtis. Did you hear Lieutenant Forbes say to Lord Henry, " I do not mean to insult you?"

A. I think I heard something to that effect.

Captain Paulet spoke in defence: after which the Court declared—" That the Court was of opinion, " that the charge had been proved " against the Prisoner, Lord Henry " Paulet, and did therefore adjudge him to be dismissed from " his Majesty's service; but, in " consideration of the whole circumstances of the case, the " Court did humbly presume to " recommend him as a proper ob- " ject for his Majesty's most gra- " cious consideration."

REMARKS ON THE HORSE OF NEW FOREST IN HAMPSHIRE.

THE horſe here is gregarious; herds of twenty or thirty are often feeding together; in ſummer eſpecially, when they have plenty of paſturage, and can live as they pleaſe. In winter they are obliged to ſeparate, and ſeek their food as they can find it. In general, indeed, they are left in all ſeaſons to take their chance of the foreſt. When there is no expence, there can be no great loſs; and what is ſaved, is ſo much gained. In marſhy parts, a ſevere winter often goes hardly with them; but in dry grounds, where heath and furze abound, they pick up a tolerable winter ſubſiſtence, eſpecially if they have learned the little arts of living which neceſſity teaches. Of theſe arts, one of the moſt uſeful is to bruiſe and pound with their fore-feet, the prickly tops of furze. This operation, which I have often ſeen performed, prepares the rigid diet of a furze-buſh in ſome degree for maſtication, and renders it rather leſs offenſive to the palate.

When

When ſuch colts, as have long run wild, are to be caught for ſale, their ideas of liberty are ſo unconfined, from paſturing in ſo wild a range, that it is a matter of no little difficulty to take them. Sometimes they are caught by ſlight of hand with a rope and nooſe; but if this method fail, they are commonly hunted down by horſemen, who relieve each other. Colt-hunting is a common practice in the foreſt. The colts, which feed on obergreen, are ſometimes taken by the following ſtratagem: in this part runs a long bog, deſcribed under the name of Longſlade bottom, which is croſſed by a mole thrown over it. With this paſſage the colt is well acquainted, and on being purſued is eaſily driven towards it. When he is about the middle of the mole, two or three men in front, oblige him to leap over the bog, where he is entangled and ſeized.

At all the neighbouring fairs, theſe horſes are a principal commodity, and are bought up for every purpoſe to which a horſe can be applied. Diminutive as they often are, you may frequently ſee half a dozen of them ſtraining in a waggon; and as it is faſhionable to drive them in light carriages, their price has been enhanced. It is a little fortune to a poor cottager, if he happens to poſſeſs three or four colts that are tolerably handſome, and match well. He may probably ſell them for ten or twelve pounds a-piece.

In point of value, the New Foreſt horſe would riſe higher, if the ſame care were taken in breeding him which was formerly taken, and which is ſtill in ſome degree obſerved in the neighbouring foreſt of Bere, where, I have heard, the keepers are ordered to deſtroy all horſes, which, at three years of age, are under thirteen hands, and all mares under twelve.

There is another evil likewiſe which tends to injure the foreſt colt, and that is, putting him to buſineſs at too early an age. Though a ſmall horſe attains maturity, earlier than a large one, yet theſe horſes, bred chiefly by indigent people, and generally of little value, are introduced much ſooner to labour, than abler and better horſes commonly are.

The fame and exploits are ſtill remembered of a little beautiful grey horſe, which had been ſuffered to run wild in the foreſt till he was eight years of age, when he had attained his full ſtrength. His firſt ſenſations on the loſs of his liberty, were like thoſe of a wild beaſt; he flew at his keeper with his open mouth, or, rearing on his hind legs, darted his fore feet at him with the moſt malicious fury. He fell, however, into hands that tamed him; he became by degrees patient of the bit, and at length ſuffered a rider. From this time his life was a ſcene of glory. He was well known on every road in the county, was the favourite of every groom, and the conſtant theme of every hoſtler. But in the chace his prowefs was moſt ſhewn; there he carried his maſter with ſo much ſwiftneſs, eaſe, and firmneſs, that he always attracted the eyes of the company, more than the game he purſued.

The New Foreſt horſe, is often ſuppoſed to be of Spaniſh extraction from anceſtors, imagined to have been ſhipwrecked on the coaſt of Hampſhire, in the time of the Armada, but I look on this as a ſpecies of the ancient vaunt, genus a Jove ſummo, and to deſerve as little attention. Some of them have a form which would not diſgrace ſo noble a lineage. The grey horſe is among the moſt beautiful; but in general, the croup of the foreſt horſe is low, and his head is ill ſet, on having what the jockies

call

call a stiff jaw.* Of this defect, a resemblance is common in some horses, whose head is set on, as those of the forest horses commonly are. Their claim to high lineage must in general rest more on their good qualities, than in their beauty; on the hardiness of their nature; on their uncommon strength; on their agility and sureness of foot, which they probably acquire by constantly lifting their legs among the furze.

But though the form of the New Forest horse is seldom beautiful, yet as the ornament of a forest scene, he is very picturesque. The horse, in his natural state rough, with all his mane about him, and his tail waving in the wind as he feeds, is always beautiful; but particularly so in so wild a scene as this, which he graces exceedingly.

CHARACTER OF A FRENCHMAN.

From a PLAY so called, written by the Marquis of Newcastle.

HIS rise is a vine-presser at Bourdeaux, a fidler in Orleans, a barber in Paris, a gentleman in England, and a Lord in the variety: he is a fawning spaniel, that will bite an Englishman if he can: the worst kind of courtier, by so much as he acts the better part. He hath always two faces, sometimes two hearts, but ever wants a soul; witness the ingenious Italian, who ever calls him a mushroon, that plant which wants a root. He can compose his forehead with a smile, while his heart curses the person, and then laughs in himself that he has cozened him. His tongue and lips are true friends to the devil; for he never sees vices but with a blear eye. If your English gentlemen but travel to Normandy to see Henry the IId's tomb, it costs him as much as if he had buried him; for in half an hour he shall have more wasps about his yellow Jacobus's than his mother for a twelvemonth about her bee hives: such legs, such hats, and services are tendered, that the traveller thinks himself in a second Jerusalem. His tongue shall ever walk in the tract of unjust praises; for a Frenchman can no more tell how to discommend than speak true: his speeches are full of wondering interjections, and cries Jesu Maria! and then shrinks his shoulders with as much zeal as a Spaniard at confession.—His praises are always in the superlative degree, and that ever in the presence of the new arrived object, the which are so stuffed with such damned hypocrisy of Ma Foi at the English suit he has on; and then tells him, with a countenance twisted like a cart-rope, that Begar, Monsieur, you have a very bon body, but de Englishman have ad sported at you; then tells of Device, the French King's taylor, who must straight be fetched, and, like a jackanapes with the bears, is so scarleted and sworded, that you would take him for a Low Country soldier, whose base mind is well suited with his mercenary tongue; who does so close up the matter, that in one summer's month in April, fiddling, dancing, boulting, fencing, and frigating, the young gallant is so tired with them, that without summons he returns, as butterflies in September, so metamorphosed, and overgrown with hair, that he looks as if he had been with Nebuchadnezzar.—A Frenchman's heart is nothing but a delightful cozenage in smooth phrases, gilded with perjury, that makes such fools, who tickle themselves to death with overvaluing themselves. If his English scholar in the French tongue, does but utter a compliment indifferently, ently, both his hands are little enough to bless himself. He extols his ingenuity in his absence, but always so that it may not want a safe conveyance to his ear, by the which he so obliges the young gallant, that he shall sooner take some French rascal for his waiting gentleman, than any Englishman, though he be ever so accomplished. In fine, he is ingenious in hiding imperfections, but not in carrying: he has a complexion for every face: the world hath not a more impudent bawd of dishonesty, than this mushroom; for honesty to him is nice singularity, and religion a mere cheat.

Lastly, he is a moth in the Englishman's coat, an earwig in the Dutch, a caterpillar in the Italian, the destruction of the glory and reputation of our British Court, a friend and slave to the trencher, and good for nothing but an Ambassador for the devil.

ARTICLES OF CAUTION TO SPORTSMEN.

For the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

MR. EDITOR,

I Submit the following for insertion in your Magazine as it is, or the substance of it, as you may think proper.

From the number of people who are learning the use of arms, and who are generally very fond of shewing their dexterity whenever or wherever they find any thing like a gun; and from the season of the year fowling pieces are very apt to be put by charged, I hope the following anecdote will have an influence to prevent persons from pointing their musket or fowling-piece, as a matter of joke, to their most intimate and best friends.

A few Sundays ago having dined at a friend's house near town, after dinner we proceeded with the rest of the company to take a walk before tea; but in going out, we had to pass an anti-chamber, in which stood a blunderbuss and fowling-piece, which we all knew, from a particular circumstance, were not loaded. It was wished, as I was the only volunteer among them, that I should shew them the progress I had made in my exercise—I said I could not shew them by either of the pieces, as they were so different from the musket I had been used to; upon which the master of the house fetched a musket from an adjoining room—I took it from him, and immediately, to shew my quickness of motion, brought it to the "make ready" position, and (had full cocked it as a matter of course) my friends were all standing before me; I was going to present, but at that instant recollecting I had not examined it, when picture to yourself my agitation of mind, when I found the piece loaded with ball and primed. Had I presented the piece and fired, I must inevitably have shot some of the company. It had been left in this state by a servant in the house, who, with all servants, should be cautioned against leaving fire arms so charged.

We are requested to caution our numerous readers to be careful in depositing their fire arms, a caution more particularly necessary at this time, when they are in the hands of so many different people. A very melancholy circumstance which occurred last month at Annesley, fatally evinces the want of precaution:—

Mr. Edward Palmer, of Bedworth, with his wife and two children, met several of their relations at his father's house, when, unfortunately, one of his children, a boy about seven or eight years of age, almost the very moment of his arrival, unobserved by any of the party present, took up a gun which stood in a corner of the room, and, not having any idea of its being loaded, with the simplicity of a child, pulled the trigger, and, sorrowful to relate, lodged the contents in his father's shoulder and neck; who, notwithstanding the aid of three skilful surgeons, languished till the next evening, when he expired. Thus he lamentably fell on the anniversary of his birth, being thirty-two years of age; and of a truth we can say, he was a kind and loving husband, a tender and affectionate father, and a sincere and generous friend.—The coroner's verdict, accidental death.—Being one of the Nuneaton associated Cavalry, the gentlemen of that respectable corps, who lived in the neighbourhood, attended his funeral.

The following melancholy catastrophe happened on Friday, the 12th instant.—As the gamekeeper of the Rev. Mr. Crawley, of Rotherfield, Sussex, was returning home from shooting, in company with a lad, his son; he, in order to shift his game, or for some other purpose, placed the but end of his gun on the ground, whilst his arm supported the muzzle, when one of the dogs in fondling about him, struck the trigger with his claw, and discharged the piece, the whole contents of which penetrated the poor man's skull, and blew out his brains. He has left a widow and several children to bemoan their loss.

A CAUTION TO SPORTSMEN IN WALKING.

The viper, well known for its venomous bite, ought to be guarded against when the season of the year is propitious to this reptile. Some few years back an amiable Nobleman of the North fell a victim to the bite of this detested animal. It has been remarked, that the present season has been extremely favourable to the viper tribe.

On Saturday, the 15th instant, Capt. T. James Smith, of Thame, in Oxfordshire, was fully convicted before Dr. Cook, one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, in the penalty of Twenty Pounds, on the information of Thomas Tuck, gamekeeper to Lord Viscount Wenman, for coursing and killing a hare without licence.

TWICKENHAM REGATTA.

A Great concourse of the nobility and gentry, in the neighbourhood of Twickenham, assembled on Tuesday, Sept. 18, to see a boat race on the Thames; which, for the encouragement of the watermen of Twickenham and Richmond, was laudably set on foot by Sir John Fleming Leicester, Bart. who gave a silver tankard to the two men who came in first, according to the following arrangement:

Three boats, with two men and a pair of oars, first started, by lot, opposite his garden, in Twickenham Deep, rowed round a boat moored about a mile up the river, and returned to another nearly opposite Twickenham Church, and from thence in shore opposite Sir John's house.

Three other boats next started in the same manner. The four unsuccessful boats of the two first heats then rowed the same distance.

PANTHER & ANTELOPE

See Vaillant's second Journey, Volume 2.d Page 140.

The winner had two guineas. Afterwards the men who won the first, second, and third heats, started again to contend for the prize. Owing, it is said, to foul play, the men who won the last heat, were run against by one of the other boats, which broke one of their oars, and obliged them to give up. The silver tankard was adjudged to William Redknap, of Twickenham, and George Cripps, of Richmond.

The day being remarkably fine, there was a very numerous concourse of spectators; among whom were the Dutchess of Gloucester in her sociable; the Stadtholder in his barge: the Duke of Queensberry in a skiff, &c.

The grounds next the river were numerously attended by visitants to the occupiers.

THE PANTHER AND ANTELOPE.

[An Etching by Mr. Howit.]

THIS Copper-plate we shall illustrate by the following extract from The Travels of Monsieur Valliant:

" One day however, as I was proceeding down the bed of the river, and beating about in the same manner with my hunters and dogs, my dogs suddenly opened, and we presently perceived before us a Panther stretched on an Antelope, which it was devouring. He appeared by no means intimidated at our approach, but glared furiously at us with his eyes, without quitting his prey. There were seven of us in company, all provided with fusees, so that we ran no great risque in attacking him. When we had advanced within fifty paces of him, he arose, turned his head towards us, and seemed to select the victim on whom it was his intention to spring. My gun was loaded with ball, I fired and wounded him, and as he fled, he received a few more slight wounds from my Hottentots. He took refuge in a hollow rock on the border of the river, a hundred paces farther on, whither my dogs followed him, and kept him at bay; but though he had lost much blood, and was necessarily weakened, they durst not attack him. We ascended the rocks on the opposite bank, and from thence another ball was fired by some of my people, which killed him. My dogs then rushed upon him, and before I could come to his rescue, they had so torn and mangled him, that his skin was good for nothing, and I resolved therefore to leave him."

To the EDITORS of the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

GENTLEMEN,

I AM a constant reader of your entertaining publication; but the sport I am most attached to, is Pugilism; I read the annals of that noble art with great pleasure. I should take it as a favour if you would insert in your next Month's Magazine, who is the most celebrated teacher of that science now in vogue, and the place of his abode, (in London).

I am, Gentlemen,

Your's, &c.

W. B.

P. S. If you were to oblige your Subscribers with a Print, illustrative of the above sport, it would, no doubt, be very acceptable, as you have not given us one plate on that head.

[In answer to this Gentleman, we must observe, that Pugilism is rather ther out of vogue at present, and further, that our acquaintance with the professors is so very confined, that we do not know who is the most celebrated teacher of the science at this time. The only good print of a boxing-match, is the one of Broughton and another; a copy from that may hereafter be given in our Magazine.]

To the EDITORS of the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

SIRS,

YOU that are sportsmen, will probably be able to inform me, who am none, whence the expression, as mad as a March hare, originates. If you can inform me, do it in your next, and oblige,

Sirs,

Your humble servant,

ANTI-NIMROD.

Glasgow, September 18, 1798.

[The Editors beg to refer this Gentleman to some of their Correspondents for an answer, to his letter of enquiry.]

REMARKABLE LARGE FISH.

SOUTHAMPTON, SEPT. 8.

A Fish of enormous size having for several days past been seen swimming in this river, many fruitless attempts were made to take it: at one time it went up the narrow river Itchen, where one of its pursuers, Mr. Richard Eyamy, of the New Forest Rifle Light Dragoons, fired at it from a boat with his carbine, and lodged a ball in its side, which, it afterwards appeared, went through eighteen inches of solid flesh; upon which the fish plunged into the water, and was for that time lost; it was however the next day discovered upon the mud, near the village of Marchwood, the tide having in some measure left it; and, it is supposed, that, owing to the quantity of blood lost by the wound, it was too much exhausted to regain the water. In this state three men in a boat approached and attacked it, forcing an iron crow down its throat, which evidently put it in great torture, and lashing the mud with his tail, he threw it to an astonishing height; the men narrowly escaped being crushed by its force; but after repeated efforts they accomplished its death, and by tying it to the boat's stern, brought it to the village of Itchen. It proved to be a whale of the beaked or bottled head species, measuring near twenty-five feet in length, and eighteen in girth; there is no division of head from the body, which is all in one; the eyes are remarkably small, and it has a snout like the beak of a bird; likewise two fins near the head, and two others towards the tail; the skin is very smooth, and of a beautiful lead colour, and the weight is supposed to be near six tons. It is a valuable prize for the fishermen who caught it, as they have exhibited it to an immense concourse of people, who flocked from the town and neighbourhood to see this uncommon natural curiosity, and have since sold it for a considerable sum to make oil, of which it must produce a very large quantity, the fish being in many parts fourteen inches thick in fat.—Some idea may be formed of its enormous size from this circumstance—eight horses and forty men could scarcely draw it the distance of fifty yards.

FEAST

FEAST OF WIT; OR,
SPORTSMAN's HALL.

A Few Sundays ago a field preacher in the Spa Fields, in explaining to his hearers the nature of hell, told them he had lived there eleven months, (meaning he had followed a wicked course of life during that period). "It is a "great pity," says a man from the crowd, "that you had not staid a "month longer, for then you would "have gained a settlement."

ANECDOTE.

A certain clerk, in the purlieus of St. James's, has a peculiar way of pronouncing the most common chords, particularly Amen! A droll circumstance arose from hence one Sunday. A dissipated young buck, who had been sitting up all the preceding night at hazard, went to church just before the second reading of the Lord's Prayer. He was scarcely seated before he fell into a slumber—in a little time the clerk vociferated "A main!" The buck jumped up, half asleep, and roared out—"Dam'me! I'll bet the castor twenty guineas."—The church was thrown into a titter, and the clergyman was just heard to say, "O Lord, shew thy mercy upon us!" when the buck ran out; but the clerk continued throwing a main to the end of the service.

When George Whitfield first visited America, Alexander Garden, of Charlestown, a man of sense and learning, but who had formerly been in the copper-trade, was the episcopal clergyman of the place. To put the people on their guard, he took occasion to point out to them the pernicious tendency of Whitfield's wild doctrines. He represented him as a religious impostor, who had an excellent knack of setting off to advantage his poisonous tenets. On the other part, Whitfield, who had been used to reproach and opposition, recriminated with double acrimony and greater success. While Alexander Gardner, to keep his flock from straying after this strange pastor, expatiated on these words of scripture,—"Those that have "turned the world upside down "are come hither also,"—Whitfield, with all the force of comic humour and wit, for which he was so eminently distinguished, by way of reply, enlarged upon these words—"Alexander, the copper-"smith, hath done me much evil; "the Lord reward him according "to his works."

ANECDOTE.

A certain vicar had a plain country man-servant, whom he ordered, one festival, to go to a butcher, named David, for a piece of meat, and then come to church, where the vicar was to preach:—the vicar, in his sermon, bringing authorities from scripture, in this manner—"Isaiah says thus; Jeremiah says thus;" at last, happening to turn towards the door, just as his servant came in, went on—"And what says David?" upon hearing this interrogatory, the countryman roared out—"He swears, by the zounds! that if you donna pay your bill, you need ne'er send to his shop again."

A middle-aged gentleman paid his addresses to a very young lady, but when he asked her in marriage was refused. Having acquainted a neighbouring clergyman of his disappointment, he received the following laconic Scriptural answer: "You ask and you receive not, because you ask a miss."

An Irish gentleman belonging to one of the Voluntary Associations, being at exercise, was frequently desired by the drill serjeant to hold up his head, and turn out his toes, at length exclaimed in a passion—"By J—s, if I am obliged to keep my head stuck up in this manner, it is impossible for me to see what becomes of my toes."

The printer of a paper in Ireland was threatened with a prosecution, for inserting the death of a person who proved to be alive.—The menace was accompanied with this shrewd observation from the attorney: "No printer shall publish a death, unless he has it expressly communicated by the party."

In the Report of the Secret Committee of the Irish Parliament, we find the following curious passage, extracted from the evidence of a Soldier, who was examined on one of the late State Trials.—Witness, "We were going up Blackmore-hill, under Sir James Duffe; there was a party of Rebels there; we met three men with green cockades; one we shot, another we hanged, and the third we flogged, and made a guide of."—"Which did you make a guide of?—"The one that was neither shot nor hanged."

AFFAIR OF HONOUR.

A personal fracas took place, a few mornings ago, between a brace of very eminent and important personages, in Manchester:—A respectable shopkeeper, finding the constitution of his kitchen-chimney wanted a little reforming, spoke to a prime-minister of the brush, to attend early on a certain morning for the purpose:—It unluckily happened that the mistress of the family had also engaged another gentleman of the above lofty science to attend at the same time:—Both the sable personages were punctual to a moment—one founding his right on the master—the other his on the mistress;—firm as a Pittite and a Tierneyite, they would neither of them give in—but, the chimney having a pretty wide mouth they both scrambled up together! and were as soon gorged in its bowels as a couple of glasses of black currant jelly could have been buried in the belly of an Alderman.—Here, however, a dreadful contest ensued.—Brush versus Brush;—the sweet melody, issuing from the enchanting organs of two cats in a gutter, was all piano to it: what Lingo would perhaps call the argumentum ad kickem, scratchem, bitem, punchem, plungem, sweepem, et brushem—were here displayed in all their feeling beauties, to the alarming comforts of the family, and the mutual satisfaction of the sooty heroes, one of whom was carried home dressed in a new sort of mourning—namely, in his soot-bag.

A kettle-mender, vulgarly called a tinker, made a terrible hole in his reputation, a few days ago, in Chester:—Being short of a little dross, and the better to hammer out the ways and means, he went to the Mayor, and positively swore, that a young man, whom he brought with him, was a deserter: the tinker, however, turned out but a botch in the business, for after a short examination, he confessed that that he had never seen the accused person before! and that he was persuaded to commit this act of perjury, by an old acquaintance, in the hope of obtaining the reward of ten shillings. Being asked the name of his old acquaintance, he drily answered, "he's a ragged scoundrel, pretty well known, that has stuck to me many years, commonly called Poverty." He was committed, with his "old acquaintance," to the care of the master of the ceremonies in the impress service.

ODD COINCIDENCE OF NAMES.

There are only two inns at Worthing, (the town where the Princess Amelia now resides) one of them is kept by Mr. Hogsflesh—the other by Mr. Bacon.

THE WITTY ROBBERY;

A Unique Anecdote.

A certain Quiz Oddbody, who kept in the hen yard of his country house, a fine flock of fat geese, and whose philosophical notions were so eccentrical, that he one day declared, in a public coffee-house, it was his decided opinion, "that geese and ganders were possessed of souls and minds as well as men;" on getting up the next morning to pay a visit to his immortal and intellectual poultry, he found that all their bodies had unaccountably taken wing, and left their heads behind them, with the following scroll, scribbled on a scrap of parchment, and tacked on to the guillotined sconce of the fattest gander in the flock.

Since, (though 'twas never yet divin'd,
  In Athens or in Greece,)
Your wisdom has explor'd a mind,
  In ganders and in geese:
Goosecaps to treat of diff'rent kinds,
  With eating and with arg'ing,
"I take their bodies, you their minds,
  "Which has the better bargain?"

A TRUE FRIEND.

"I heard you much slander'd," cries Richard to Ned,
"T'other day, by an impudent coxcomb, "who said
"That you scarcely were fit to take guts to a "bear."
"Well: and what did you say?"—"Why "I said that you were!"

PADDY's PURCHASE.

It chanc'd on a time, that an Irish dear honey,
Who'd lately receiv'd a small sum of money;
Took it into his head to dispose of his riches
In what he much wanted—a good pair of breeches.
On a piece of prime stuff, his eye overcasting,
And asking his name, he was told, "Ever- "lasting;"
"If it be everlasting!" quoth Pat with a stare,
"Then by Jasus, my jewel, I'll purchase "two pair."

EPIGRAM.

A fire breaking out t'other night at an inn,
  Where honest Pat Dogherty took up his dwelling;
The people were rous'd, but in spite of their din,
  Pat snor'd, tho' the watchman kept knocking and yelling.

Then Pat, who at length thro' the window did peep,
  Said, "Bother your soul for a stupid old "codger,
"How dare you to wake one before one's "asleep,
  "Arrah, let the house burn, sure I'm "only a lodger."

The wife of an indigent ways and means man, became lately possessed possessed of a few guineas by the bounty of a friend, and consulted with a neighbour, in what manner she could conceal them from her husband. "Nothing," replied the other, "is more easy than to conceal them effectually in a place where he can never think of looking for them—Put them in his pocket."

A curious specimen of orthography is painted on a board, affixed to the house of a Jew in Ratcliff Highway:

"I. B. Shilver Smit, Shlop Sheller, and Dealer in all Shorts of Old and New Cloaths for Shea and Land, en the mosht reashonable Terms.—Mosht Money given for old Gold and Shilver. Vatchmaking in all its various branches.

"N. B. Goot Pargains may bee expected to the Shailors considering the extensive beasiness carried on at dis Varehouse."

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

A Young Pigeon of a respectable family, inheriting 5000l. per annum, though not yet come to years of discretion, lost three thousand guineas last week at a single sitting: the game was a little beyond chicken hazard: an Irish shake-bag is said to have stripped off the principal part of the feathers in this extraordinary bye battle.

A CAUTION.

As the sporting season is now commenced, we think it right to apprise our readers that every Gamekeeper is to be charged to the duty on servants; and by an act passed the 10th of May last, a penalty of 30l. is inflicted on any person omitting to deliver in a list containing the greatest number of servants by him retained or kept. —And by the same act a duty of six shillings is payable for every greyhound, hound, pointer, setting-dog, or spaniel, lurcher, or terrier; and a duty of four shillings payable on every dog, (not being a greyhound, hound, setting dog, spaniel, lurcher, or terrier) where one such dog and no more, be kept.—And a penalty of 50l. against any person wilfully omitting any description in his list of dogs, to be by him delivered in according to the act.

On Wednesday the 5th of September in the evening, the following melancholy accident happened at Petworth, in Sussex.—As the coachman of the Earl of Egremont was watering a pair of horses in a pond in the park during the storm, one of them took fright at a flash of lightning, and plunged from him into the water beyond his depth, when the coachman perceiving that he was unable to swim, and attributing the cause to his being curbed, followed him on the other horse, in order to remove the impediment, but in the attempt he fell into the water, and was unfortunately drowned, with the beast he endeavoured to save. The other horse swam, and recovered the land without injury.

REFINEMENT OF 1798.

A few evenings ago, near Cheadle, a large group of adults, of both sexes, assembled to see a party of naked men run a foot-race!—A neighbouring boniface, having an eye upon his beer-barrel, had given a pair of breeches to be run for—by

by naked men!—What a nakedness of civilization!——No cloathing could hide the shame of such a transaction!

CURE FOR THE VAPOURS.

It is remarked by Hippocrates, that the Ladies of Scythia were never known to be afflicted with this dreadful disorder—And he states the cause to be from their being accustomed to the exercise of arms, serving in the cavalry, and never marrying until they had killed three enemies of their country.

ABSENCE OF MIND, AN ANECDOTE.

Mr. Lowndes, Secretary of the Treasury, in the reign of George I. was remarkable for a close attendance to business, and a total absence to all other concerns.—Having married his fourth wife, a young lady in the city, he afterwards went to the Treasury, and attended his business till eleven at night, when he called his servant to attend him to bed.—"Sir," said he, "I beg pardon, you have forgot my Lady."—"Gad so, John, and so I have—call a coach."—Mr Lowndes went instantly into the city, brought home his lady, and afterwards had eleven children by her.

Formerly, it appears from ancient records, that the Shrewsbury flying waggon came to London (if God permitted) in twenty-one days, and the flying coach in nine. By this means people travelled slow and sure. Now the waggon comes in five days, and the coach in about twenty hours. Such rapidity would have astonished our ancestors as much as the flight of a balloon.

BATH, SEPT. 5.

Saturday last died of a gradual decline, aged above threescore years, Richard Hutchinson, better known by the name of Foolish Dick, who has been the last forty years a regular attendant on the servants of the lodging-houses on the Parades, Abbey-Green, and that neighbourhood; where he regularly came early every morning, receiving from one or another his daily supply of food, and returned to his lodgings in Widcombe as regularly every evening. The weakness of his intellects drew on him the compassion, as the innocent simplicity of his behaviour did the regard, of many persons in the upper and lower walks of life. The late David Garrick, Esq. for many years during his life, allowed him one shilling a week, which he also left him at his death. He regularly attended all Meetings of the religious Society of Quakers, and was allowed by them likewise one shilling a week. At every funeral of any note, poor Dick was a constant attendant.

A fox paid a visit, we are told in one of the papers, to a farm near the Grange, in Hampshire, and killed one hundred and eighteen fowls, "fifty-five of which he left dead behind him."—Quere, Did he eat and carry away sixty-three!

Monday, September 17, thirteen persons, apprehended under authority of a search warrant, at a house in Lisle-street, against which an information had been laid, for suffering gaming, contrary to law, were examined, examined before N. Conant, Esq. at the Public Office, Marlborough-street.

Several other persons were in the room at the same time, but in the general confusion escaped. One man, in endeavouring to let himself down from the window over the street door, fell into the area of the next house, and was, it is apprehended, mortally hurt.

The prisoners were ordered to find bail to answer what may be objected against them at the next Westminster Sessions.

On Thursday the 13th instant, a private in the Hampshire fencibles, belonging to a troop quartered at East Bourne, was committed to the House of Correction in Lewes, on a charge of beastiality with a pointer bitch. He has in consequence been discharged the regiment, and will take his trial for the offence at the next Assizes.

The horse-stealers have lately practised their profession with good success in the neighbourhood of Buxted, Sussex, where we understand six horses have been stolen within the short space of a fortnight, and rode off by the robbers without leaving the smallest trace to lead to a discovery of their persons. Punishments, however exemplary, seem to make but little progress in the prevention of this crime.

On the 9th of last month his Royal Highness Prince Edward, at present in Nova Scotia, met with an accident, which threatened fatal consequences. On passing a small wooden bridge, in Halifax, it suddenly broke down, when the Prince and his horse were precipitated into a ditch amongst a heap of stones and rubbish; the horse fell on his Highness's left thigh, on which he received a violent contusion. He was in a fair way of recovery.

A CAUTION TO SPORTSMEN.

The viper, well known for its venomous bite, ought to be guarded against, when the season of the year proves propitious to this reptile.—Some few years back, an amiable nobleman of the North fell a victim to the bite of this detested poisonous animal.—It has been remarked that the present season has been extremely favourable to the viper tribe.

Mr. Coke, of Norfolk, shot one day lately, twenty-two brace of birds.

Mr. G—rst—n, the gentleman who picked up a pocket book at the Bath Club, about two years ago, containing notes to the amount of a few thousand pounds, and was in consequence requested by a very good judge on the occasion to try what he could pick up in the way of Botany, in another hemisphere, is snug in his chateau at Ilchester, where he lives in all the ease and comfort that becomes a gentleman.

Saturday, July 15, Mary Middlemas, wife of Walter Middlemas, farmer, at Ripton, near Workington, was safely delivered of three fine boys, who, with the mother, are likely to do well; at a former birth she had twins, a son and a daughter.

POETRY.

POETRY.

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

THE PARTRIDGES—AN ELEGY.

Written the day before Partridge Shooting in September.

ILL-fated birds, for whom I raiſe the ſtrain,
To tell my lively ſorrow for your fates;
Ye little know, ere morn ſhall gild the plain,
What drear deſtruction all your race awaits.

While innocently baſking in the ray,
That throws the lengthen'd ſhadows o'er the lawn,
Unconſcious you behold the parting day,
Nor feel a fear to meet the morrow's dawn.

Could man like you thus await the ills of life,
Nor e'er anticipate misfortune's blow,
He'd ſhun a complicated load of ſtrife,
Greater than real evils can beſtow.

Ev'n now the Sportſman anxious for his fame,
Prepares the tube ſo fatal to your race;
He pants already for the glorious game,
Of ling'ring hours he chides the tardy pace.

Raptur'd he'll hie him at the dawn of day,
With treacherous caution tread your haunts around,
Exulting, rout his poor defenceleſs prey,
Then bring the fluttering victims to the ground.

Yes! while he gives the meditated blow,
And ſees around the ſtruggling covey bleed,
His iron heart a barbarous joy ſhall know,
And plume itſelf upon the bloody deed.

For ſhame! can men who boaſt a poliſh'd mind,
And feeling too, theſe ſavage paſtimes court?
In ſuch inhuman acts a pleaſure find,
And call the cruel deſolation—ſport?

Thouſands that graze the fields muſt daily bleed,
Neceſſity compels—for man they die;
But no excuſe neceſſity can plead,
To kill thoſe harmleſs tenants of the ſky.

By Heav'n privileg'd they build the neſt,
They take the common bounty nature yields,
No property with vicious force moleſt,
But pick the refuſe of the open fields.

Then why, if God this privilege has given,
Should we pervert great Nature's bounteous plan?
For happineſs is ſure the end of Heaven,
As well to bird, and inſect, as to man.

Like us they move within their ſphere,
Each various paſſion of the mind confeſs,
And joy and ſorrow, love, and hope, and fear,
Alternate pain them, and alternate bleſs.

Yes! they can pine in grief—with rapture glow,
Their little hearts to every feeling true;
Like us conceive affection, and the blow
That kills the offspring, wounds the mother too.

Then bid your breaſts for nobler paſtimes burn,
Let not ſuch cruelty your actions ſtain!
Humanity ſhould teach mankind to ſpurn,
The pleaſure purchas'd by another's pain.

THE ADVICE OF AN OLD SPANIEL.

A Certain dog of middling birth,
Frolicksome and full of play,
E'en in the height of all his mirth,
Delicate as well as gay:
With far more feeling for his friend,
Then they could either taste or comprehend,
Being thrown into the world betimes,
Betimes discover'd it was all a cheat;
Yet not so dangerous for odious crimes,
As odious for malice and deceit:
Oft when he meant to have amus'd
His friends with a conceit or harmless jest,
By many he was snarl'd at and abus'd,
And slighted even by the best.
Oft when half-starv'd he found a bone,
Or something hid;
Instead of eating it alone,
As others did,
He ran to share his daily bread,
Unsought,
With those that were much better fed
Than taught.
His daily bread they seiz'd,
And drove him from their mess,
More disappointed and displeas'd
With their ingratitude, than his distress.
It is a maxim amongst dogs
When they have address and skill,
To slip their collars and their clogs,
And leave their friends that use them ill:
To avoid anxiety and strife,
Tray was resolv'd to try a country life.
A country dog, I think,
Is exactly like a country 'Squire;
They both are only fit to sleep and stink,
By their own fire;
And when awake, are only good
To yelp and halloo in a wood.
Their joys
And conversation are the same,
'Tis all a clamour and a noise;
And all the noise and clamour about game:
Three words compose their whole vocabulary,
A fox, a hare, and a fine scenting day,
Whether they are serious or merry,
'Tis all they have to say.
In short, they are never so entertaining,
As when they're fast asleep, or feigning.
To quit such friends as these
One would not grieve;
Tray parted from them with great ease,
Without so much as taking leave:
Consults his grandsire, by profession
A Spaniel;
For judgment and discretion
A perfect Daniel.
Benign and mild,
He heard his grandson's grievances, and smil'd.
Grandson, said he, I do conceive,
If you had known the world, and how things go,
But half as much as you believe;
Which is twice as much as I believe you know,
You would not have complain'd,
That dogs behave to one another
When they are unchain'd,
Like every creature to his brother.
Say, dupe of a rash confidence and trust,
If you lie open and unguarded,
Is it not just
That vigilance should be rewarded?
'Twas neither nature's call,
Nor my instruction,
To trust our friends at all,
Much less to trust them to your own destruction.
A painful and severe attention
Is but a necessary fence
To every dog of sense,
Against deceit and circumvention,
A task from which you hope to be reliev'd.
By trusting to your friends
You are deceiv'd;
Acting as much as they for your own ends;
All the world knows
That friendship's a meer sound,
A sound that hardly can impose
Upon a puppy hound,
Nature is not to blame;
Flatter'd by cunning, indolence invented
That foolish name
By which so many fools are circumvented.
Happiness you'll seldom find,
Unless you learn
To have no weighty interest or concern
With those of your own kind.
Unless you learn (if it is not too late)
That they are neither worth your love nor hate.

PRO REGE, LEGE, GREGE.

A NEW SONG.

Written by Mr. DEIGHTON.
Tune—"Good Queen Bess."

IN times like these—pop, cut, and slash—this monstrous fighting age, Sirs,
When shoulder, fire, and face about, is every where the rage, Sirs;
When Britons arm in Briton's cause—no foes excite our fears, Sirs,
And where's the Lads more loyal than the* —— Volunteers, Sirs?

* The reader may substitute any town he pleases.

CHORUS.

CHORUS.

Then merry be the lads, who fight for
Commons, King, and Peers, Sirs;
And may prosperity attend the —— Volunteers, Sirs.

I

Tho' not alike in shape or size, our sentiments agree, Sirs,
And should Frenchmen doubt our patriot zeal, e'en let them come and see, Sirs;
And though we're sometimes strangely group'd, yet none will dare oppose, Sirs,
That if we're not well match'd ourselves, we well can match our foes, Sirs.
Then merry be, &c. &c.

We've lawyers, doctors, grocers, printers, bookbinders, and bakers, Sirs,
We've taylors, hosiers, glovers, painters, smiths, and undertakers, Sirs,
And many more, whose praise aloud shall Britons chearful sing, Sirs,
Who stand protectors of their wives, their children, and their King, Sirs.
Then merry be, &c.

The lawyer folk should lead the van; for not to speak too large, Sirs,
All know, who've seen a lawyer's bill, they're not afraid to charge, Sirs;
I'm sure in each engagement they would ever foremost be, Sirs,
And twenty actions in a day would suit them to a T, Sirs. Then merry be, &c.

The doctors they will prime them well with powder, ball, and pill, Sirs,
And well we know that eight in ten they're always sure to kill, Sirs;
Their mortars they will keep well charg'd with such good things as they know best,
And draught them off for t'other world, and send them quietly to rest.
Then merry be, &c.

We've bakers who would ring a peal, till foes cry'd fire and faggot, Sirs:
And cheesemongers, those mighty men, would make 'em skip like maggots, Sirs;
Our taylors would their jackets trim, our barbers bring their poles out, Sirs;
Our shoe-makers wou'd peg and strap, and knock their very soles out, Sirs.
Then merry be, &c.

Besides these military blades, we've constables so civil, Sirs,
That if our foes are insolent, will send them to the devil, Sirs;
They'll prove themselves brave special men, and tho' they've ne'er ta'en arms,
Will make their foes soon shake their legs— they'll soon be tir'd of war's alarms.
Then merry be, &c.

Then let us fill, be this our toast, "May England long be free, Sirs;
And ever, in the glorious cause, her sons united be, Sirs;
May he who'd break the social bank, that links us to each other, Sirs,
Be banish'd from Old England's shore, and forc'd to seek another, Sirs."
Then merry be, &c.

PATIENCE.—A TALE.

'TWAS at some country place, a parson preaching,
The virtue of long sufferance was teaching;
And so pathetically did exhort
His list'ning congregation, and in short
Discoursed so much of Job, and how he bore
With such exceeding pleasantry his woes,
Faith t'was enough to make a man suppose
Job wished for more.

Meaning, perhaps, that since 'tis plain,
How needlesly we grieve at pain;
How would it be if man
Pursued a different plan,
And were to laugh and treat the matter lightly;
And not when tortur'd with the gout,
To make wry faces, roar and shout,
But look agreeable, and sprightly.

" And pray d'ye think, my dearest life,"
Exclaimed the parson's wife,
As after church they sat
In courteous chat,
" That 'tis in human nature to endure
" The sad extremity of woe,
" That Job," you say, " did undergo;
" 'Tis more than you or I cou'd do, I am " sure."

" My dear, (quoth he), this diffidence,
" Shews, let me tell you, great good sense,
" A talent in your sex we seldom see;
" And doubtless the remark is true,
" As far as it extends to you,
" Tho' not, I think, to me.

" No woman since the world began,
" Cou'd bear misfortune like a man—
" And in good truth, 'twixt you and me,
" And that without much vanity,
" I do conceive that I myself have shewn
" That patience and that strength of " mind
" Were not entirely confin'd
" To Job alone."

Thus

Thus said the modeft prieft, and would have faid much more,
But for the fudden opening of the door,
When out of breath, in ftumps
His clownifh fervant "Numps,"
His mouth wide open, on the parfon gazing—
Juft like the wight,
Who drew old Priam's curtains in the night,
To tell him Troy was blazing.

"Well, Numps, the matter? fpeak! why
"look'ft fo pale!
Has any thing gone wrong?" Quoth Numps,
"The ale."
"What," cries the prieft, "the ale gone
"four?"
(And then his phiz began to lower);
"Turn'd four? No meafter, no," replied
the fellow;
"But juft now, as I went, d'ye fee,
"To tilt the cafk—away rolled he,
"And all the liquor's fpilt about the "cellar."

The fact was, Numps a cafk of ale had ftaved,
Now prythee tell me, how the Prieft behaved?
Did he pull off his wig, or tear his hair?
Or like that filly fellow Job,
Throw afhes on his head, or rend his robe?
Say, how did he thus dire misfortune
bear?
As thus, in voice of pious refignation,
He to his man addreffed this mild oration:

"May God confound thee, thou d—n'd
"ftupid bear;"
(The beft of Priefts, you know, will fome-times fwear)
"What, you muft meddle, muft you
"With the barrel, and be cur'ft t'ye?
"I wifh thy paws were in the fire—Odd
"rot'm—
"Get thee down ftairs this inftant,
"wretch,
"Or by the living G—d, I'll kick thy
"breech
"From top to bottom."

"Nay, now, my deareft," cried the Dame,
"Is this your patience?—Fie for fhame!
"I beg you'll recollect your text,
"Job was not half fo vext
"When he'd his fons and daughters to be-
"wail."
"D—n all his fons and daughters if you
"choofe,
"Anfwer me this, I fay—Did Job e'er
"lofe
"A barrel of fuch ale?"

THE DOUBLE MISTAKE.

AN EPIGRAMMATIC TALE.

IT chanc'd one day, as through the ftreet
I trudg'd—in hopes fome friend to meet,
Difpos'd to kill an hour,
In focial chat, o'er pipe and glafs,
And laugh at all the hum drum clafs,
Whom cynic precepts four:

And make a jeft of trifling things,
Which roufe the gall of Lords and Kings,
But never yet ftirr'd mine:
And interchange a fportive thought,
From fancy's ftorehoufe, promptly fraught,
As wit gives zeft to wine:

Before me puſh'd, in thrifty pace,
One, whom I thought the felf-fame chace,
Had led in queft of ME;
His fhape, his drefs, his gait the fame,
As honeft —— you'll excufe his name,
But I'd have fworn 'twas HE.

But when, on fhoulder, I my hand
Clapp'd hard, to bring him to a ftand,
With—"How now, honeft Ned!"
He turn'd, and frown'd, and filence broke,
His cheek all pallid while he fpoke,
And mine fuffus'd with red!

"What means this freedom, Sir?"—"Gad
"fo!
"Your pardon, Sir," fays I——"I trow,
"We're all to error prone;
"My blind miftake with favour fcan,
"I took you for another man,
"Ive been to blame I own."

"Sir," fays the wight with gallows brow,
And fuch a cut-throat face, I vow,
As made me almoft quake;
"I am not him you took me for,
"So take more care in future.——Or,
"Beware your next miftake."

"I thank you, Sir, but faith," fays I,
"I took your Worfhip, by the by,
"Before I faw your phiz,
"For a good honeft hearty cock,
"Whofe looks would no beholder fhock,
"For fuch HIS afpect is."

"His afpect, Sir! And why not MINE?"
"Dear Sir," fays I, "Pray don't opine,
"That I am ever nice;
"But if, ——, as one miftake I've own'd,
"An honeft man, in YOU, I've found,
"I've been miftaken twice!"
